

2 Hour Copywriting Masterclass with Nick Verge

A lot of people know that uh you've done some work for like Jordan Beilefford, Alex Jones, and you've helped people make millions of dollars with funnels. But I'd love to go deeper today and see, you know, how you're helping your clients and what kind of insights you have for copywriters looking to take their career to the next level and marketers in general, too. >> Cuz the second you get hired is the second you can get fired. Because 90% of what keeps the client is the communication. It's not your result. I've had it with clients where we absolutely crush for them and then I lose the client because I didn't communicate properly on something. Like we have a client where we made them $1.5 million with a VSSL. Okay. They didn't have the VSSL before. And because I said something that was maybe a little bit aggressive inside of our Slack chat, they fired me and went with someone else. And it's like, oh, are they really that petty? Yes, absolutely. >> That is quite scary for most copywriters. >> It's not for the faint of heart. Every win you make is like, got me a week, got me two weeks, got me a month, got me two months, right? The idea that, oh, my clients really like me, so they'll keep me. you as a beginner copywriter, you won't understand this because you haven't messed up enough. So, you have to make all the mistakes and see what the problems are. So, then you can prevent against them and you can create a hedge against those problems. The big mistake that I see copywriters make. All right. So, today I'm here with Nick Verge. Thanks for joining me, bro. Really appreciate it. I am looking forward to asking you a lot of questions. A lot of people know that uh you've done some work for for like Jordan Beilefford, Alex Jones, and you've helped people make millions of dollars with funnels, but I'd love to go deeper today and see, you know, how you're helping your clients and what kind of insights you have for copywriters looking to take their career to the next level and marketers in general, too. >> Yeah, I have um I'm known for very unorthodox insights, so I think this will definitely be very different for most people. Probably not what they're expecting. Yeah. I mean, we were just chatting before this call about content and how it's not as trackable as the type of work that you like to do. >> Mhm. >> What's that all about? >> I think if you go and you study the roots of our industry, specifically copy, you're going to end up at direct mail. So, if you go back far enough, you're going to end up at direct mail. You'll end up as well at like newspaper advertising. But the original form of advertising was like branded advertising. So most people know about you know people like Eugene Schwarz breakthrough advertising and uh you know in general people have seen Madmen the show where they'll see the billboards with the logos and with the you know pretty pictures and whatnot like that was all very much so branded focused advertising. It really wasn't direct response. Um, now there's episodes though where inside of that show they're like, "Hey, we want to do coupons, right?" And coupons were like the first form of direct response because if I brought in a coupon to the store and they at the end of the month were like, "Okay, we got 10,000 of these coupons." We can measure the response. So, it's direct response. I hear people say it all the time. And then when I ask them about what does that mean, they like don't know why it's called direct response. because we're measuring the response that we got from the campaign. >> So coupons were the first version of that. And then eventually what ended up happening is that well you know not everyone wanted to just do coupons all the time. And once mailing became like more frequent and it was a little bit more available in the country and whatnot. People could just buy lists and they could just blast mail. Uh people like Gary Halbert, for instance, would cook up an offer, uh get some janky fulfillment on the back end of it, and then just blast out letters. And they'd figure out what letter out of like, let's say they blasted out 200, 300, 400 letters. Um what letter converted the best. Then they would go and uh they would actually just see, okay, hey, this one did the best. Let's now send it to 10,000 people. Okay, we'll do another AB split test. This one did the best. Let's now do it to 20,000, 30,000, 40,000. Before all that, it was catalogues. Like they would ship catalogues to a small town because you can't go to the big city to go to Macy's and whatnot and go grab, you know, whatever you need, pots, pans, clothes, jackets, whatever. So, all of these forms of direct response are kind of the origins of our industry. And it's only realistically within maybe the last I don't even want to put a number on it but recently where organic content and when I say recently I mean in the grand scheme of things we're talking about over the course of like 120 years. So when I say recently you know you can filter that properly but branded content became a really big focus and I see the validity for branded content. I'm not against content. I post content, but when it comes to providing a service to someone, what I want is I want to get paid a lot of money and I want my my income to be directly tied to the company's revenue. And with organic, sure, there's some stuff that you can do, but you're very much so at the mercy of the algorithm, and you're very much so at the mercy of whatever that person's brand is. So, if I'm coming in and the client already has 500,000 followers on Instagram, well, you bet your butt we're going to be posting stuff on their content, but they're going to dry that out pretty quickly. So, what I found, like for instance, we had it once where we were running a like gut health offer for a female influencer who had like a big health personal brand and everything like that. And uh she was posting and she wasn't really getting that many sales, but she's like, I have 700,000 followers. I don't understand why. And then we go and look at her demographics. It's all guys who are just following her cuz she posts booty pics and pics that are provocative. Yeah, >> I'll I'll let the the viewers fill those details in. So, you know, it's just not the same as I have a specific message with a specific form of media. Maybe it's a video or an image and I can see based on that how many clicks do I get? based on that, how many people actually took me up on whatever offer I had, whether it is something for free, something that's paid, something that's you need to register, whatever it is, I I I can have a lot more control over that because with content, you don't have a dial. I can't turn it up unless I get Andy Fcella and Gary Vee and Patrick Bet David to promote me. You'll notice that all of the people at like the top of the content game, it's like this incestuous circle that they're in where everyone's promoting everyone because that's the only way they can grow is they have to like be buddy buddies with everyone and they have to like go on their podcast and do that. And me personally, I don't want that for my brand because I don't like a lot of people just in general. Like I'm kind to people, but I don't not enough to associate my brand with them. >> Um, >> it's a good point. And in general, I just want to have more control over everything. And so with the clients that we work with, we don't like we'll consult on the messaging that'll go on their organic content. And we've seen a lot of success just helping them on consulting, just leaving it at that. Um, but as far as it goes for like what do we want to be responsible for? What do we want our income, our revenue to be tied to? I want it to be tied directly to cash collected and that comes from paid advertising. I I don't want to do it from organic. It's interesting because a lot of the marketing agencies that I've indirectly worked with through copywriters I've coached, they often find that the best clients that they can scale with paid have more organic as well to support that like that trust. So what is your thoughts on you know um how to leverage organic maybe for more direct response results from like ads or something? >> Yeah, it's not me saying that organic doesn't work. like organic does work and it does help paid ads, but I can also show you people who weren't doing organic at all and just were an absolute menace at paid ads and just were better than the people that I've met with organic. So, there's a lot of stuff in the marketing world where people will say, "Well, I found this and then it's based on like one client or like two clients or like three client and then I can go and show you four clients where that's not the case." And so it's like what's the epistemic like h how how are we how are we creating a thesis here? What's the foundation for what we're saying is true and is not true. So you have to understand how to read data because it's like yeah you got this client and they're in a group and they referred you to three people who are all kind of following the same playbook because they're all in a mastermind together. Of course you're going to have see similar results there. So I like organic in terms of the fact that yes it does help our paid ads. I just don't want to be responsible for it because now what I'm responsible for is whether or not the client feels good, whether they're going to show up properly on the ads, whether, you know what I mean? Like I don't I don't want to have to handle any of that stuff. So, you know, I if a client if I, you know, we have a client right now that we're talking to tomorrow that we're going to uh propose a package to, she's got a great following online, but she's also really good at paid ads. And so it's like I'd rather work with her than someone who's never done paid ads before and uh just does organic because I guarantee you when we especially if it's a female creator, I guarantee you when you go into the metrics, majority of is just guys who like to look on Instagram, it's not oh 100% of a qualified audience. Whereas ads, I can be so specific and then I can control how much I actually show the message to them and I can just turn the dial up and I can also go to adjacent audiences and you're not penalized for it. So like a lot of people don't talk about this but with organic when you are running a primarily organic brand and you want to go outside of what you normally post what happens your audience is like what is this? this is I don't like this, right? And they're just like this is dumb, right? They get upset at you because like you broke your core values, which is just like it's like Reddit tier behavior. It's just like the dumbest thing that you could possibly see. >> But with paid ads, nobody cares. That's their first time seeing you. You have access to literally the entire world basically. Nobody cares. So, I'm I'm a bigger fan of my revenue for my company and how we get paid being tied to something I have more control over than something I don't have control over. That also requires a lot of social norms. Like you'll notice some clients are like, "Oh, I don't want to post five times a day. I'm going to upset my audience." Whereas like I have a client where, "Hey, can we double the odd spend?" Yep. See what I mean? So, it's like it's it's it's very different in terms of what you're managing. I think that in the beginning phases when you're like first getting started in your career, just take what you can get, right? So, if someone needs help with organic and they want help with like captions and they want help with that and they they want you to help with the the organic side of things, just do it to get case studies across the line. But eventually, where the big boys all play at is paid because it's just so much more controllable. And also, paid leads to organic. When when someone buys your stuff or they they opt in for something and then you're linking your social media, it's just nurture. So, I don't like only being dependent on nurture. I want to be dependent on paid because it's just it's so much more controllable. >> I've definitely found for the copywriters that make the most money that I coach, they all they all have paid clients. So, it's it's definitely like if you want to be in direct response, you know, this is where you can have you can easily justify premium rates. Whereas, if you're doing like organic, you know, I mean, I like I like organic quite a lot because I've done a lot of stuff for my own brand with organic. But if I were to go and sell a service to a client, you know, let's say not info, not for myself, not sell coaching, but be so be a service provider. I was working with a client that had like a million followers on Instagram. And it was damn irritating trying to figure out what the actual messaging was that was creating like the the boost because it's like you run all this stuff, you do all these stories, even stories, you you do like IG shoutouts, where's the direct attribution? Like you can't track it properly. And it's like they were spending all this time trying to get this tracking. And it's like it is it last month's IG shoutouts that have just nurtured to the point that there's now sales and that's the data that you're thinking is actually like this week's shout out. So now we changed the messaging from like you don't know what messaging to change because you don't even know the length of the sales cycle. So that was that was damn irritating. And so it's like that's why I've always enjoyed email and paid stuff and all my best clients always had a lot of paid. So yeah. Yeah. I'm with you. >> Yeah. I mean, dude, it's like there's degrees of which you can track things. Like, if someone's speaking at an event, okay, that's wildly untrackable on what the conversion rate and what I mean, you could say, hey, this many people were there and this many people converted, but like you don't really have control of how many people show up to the event. And then like, let's say you're doing like a networking event. Okay, that's even less. So, then let's move to the right. Okay, now you're doing organic content. Okay, now you're doing like paid ads with like optins and then you have like a full funnel strategy. You see how it like it moves to being more and more controllable. So why I think people don't want to do paid ads and don't want to manage it is because there's a lot of responsibility and there's a lot of pressure on you and that you got to make the campaign work. So it's not it's not for you know the faint of heart. It's not for people who don't want to actually bear the burden of the fact that we live and die by the sword. And so that sword is paid ads. So, I've had it where a campaign doesn't work for a client. Well, you have to set the expectations proper with the client that it's like this is paid ads. So, this is not a lottery where you're going to launch an offer and get $5 million overnight. We may I have a client where we've been working for them for a year. It's a very difficult offer to crack. It's a it's a B2B offer. We haven't really gotten them notable results over paid ads. It's been difficult because we've had to test a bunch of different offers. We've had to test a bunch of stuff, you know, but because I set the expectations right, I'm like, "Hey, dude, you know, you're going to go hire another agency, maybe like you're going to be pissed off. Hey, we didn't get results with this guy for 6 months, 8 months, whatever." But you have nothing up and running right now on paid ads. You have zero paid ads offers that are validated versus all our clients that are crushing it all have paid ads offers that are validated that are working. We have literal data and metrics that we can go towards. So, I have to first find product market fit for you. That takes a long a lot of time, a lot of effort, a lot of energy, right? And it's like if you want to go and hire some other agency because they're going to put some shiny BS in front of you like, "Oh, we'll guarantee you this. Go for it." But you're going to end up right back in the position you're at right now. So, we will handle everything for you and we'll get you to that point, but it will take time. And it's being able to understand like you you as a as a beginner copywriter, you won't you won't understand this because you haven't messed up enough. So you have to like make all the mistakes and see what the problems are. So then you can prevent against them and you can create a hedge against those problems. Uh and just knowing how to navigate the communication because 90% of what keeps the client is the communication. It's not your results. I've had it with clients where we absolutely crush for them and then I lose the client because I didn't communicate properly on something and it's like, oh, are they really that petty? Yes, absolutely. >> Yeah. I I think that when it comes to when it comes to spending a lot of money, especially watching your clients spend money on your creative or on the things that you're running for them and they're spending thousands a day or tens of thousands. I guess it depends on the size of the client. That is quite scary for most copywriters. I found when I found when I do ads, I'm actually less intimidated by ads because ads are very closely directed to the core marketing message, the core product market fit. Whereas with email and organic, it's actually almost more guessing. The way I find it, it's like you're kind of like going off. You're trying to do spin-off ideas, whereas with ads, it's it's, >> you know, half the ad could be the same body copy for like most of the ads, and then you just change the lead or something, you know, or it there's less there's less guesswork. I would say I think that all the real guessing all the the theories that you're testing would come from that initial, you know, figuring out what that offer looks like and how you're actually going to, you know, show it to the market and like how you're going to approach that. What What is part of the process that you guys go through cuz I know that you focus a lot on not just the copy, but also all the marketing systems that the business needs in place to to really make that paid effort work. like what what kind of stuff do you start doing in the early in the early phase to figure out product market fit to figure out the big ideas that you want to put out in front of an audience? Uh just just the general like you know perspective on all that. >> Yeah. Well, there's a concept that I really like called haystack syndrome. And so this is what most business owners deal with. And when you listen to this like for the first time, a lot of people are going to have clarity as to like what's going on with their clients. I don't see a lot of people talk about this. Haystack syndrome is essentially that metaphor of needle in the hay stack. And so what you have whenever you come into any business is a lot of hay. There's a lot of hay and you got to find the few needles. So essentially what you have to focus on is what are the biggest points of leverage inside of this company that we can create that would immediately get them results because the second you get hired is the second you can get fired. So you have basically like every win you make is like oh got me a week, got me two weeks, got me a month, got me two months, right? And so with some clients when you have more rapport and whatnot, you know, it can extend a little bit longer and whatnot. But, you know, the idea that, oh, my clients really like me, so they'll keep me. Nope. Because someone like me will come and then we just, you know, can show them how we can handle so much more. Cut their budget by, you know, whatever half and less people and then, you know, we'll we'll get them better results. And they're like, "Ah, I like John." But I've literally seen it with clients. It's kind of weird. It's almost like I hate to say it, but it's almost like dating or whatnot where it's like they meet a guy who's like more successful and they just like slowly start to like move out of the relationship and whatnot. Not saying >> hypergamous business clients. >> Hypergamous business clients is very real. >> It's funny. >> Um, not saying that's the case for everyone. And I'm not saying that's the case for all ladies, but it's definitely like something that you you notice once you start working with bigger clients is they're they're looking for number one, first and foremost, the person who understands their business the best, and then the person they're most confident in. So, what we do is we first come into a business and I figure out, okay, what are the main points of leverage? What are the main needles in the haystack? So, I I I think what everyone wants to exist in is this reality where it's just cookie cutter. We come in, we do a low ticket ascension funnel, plug it in, bing, bing, boom, and then we're good to go. And you know what I've realized is all the guys who offer that for the most part are not doing that well. Like they maybe make a couple grand a month, they do okay, right? But as a whole, like they their clients don't really get the best results. And more often than not, when they show a case study of like this guy crushed, okay, six months later, where is it? And then the offer is no longer up, the page is a 404, right? So, it's like what happened is that they're applying a static strategy that's lowhanging fruit. >> And so, when you go into a client's business and you're only looking for lowhanging fruit and that's it, right? You're going to get them some quick wins, but then you're not really contributing to the overall growth of the business. So, you are a liability at that point. You're not a long-term asset. And the sooner that you start to think about what you're providing to a client is you need to be a long-term asset, the sooner I think you're going to get to where you need to be as a marketer because everyone's like, I'm a copywriter. I'm a copywriter. You should not want to stay as a copywriter in my opinion, especially with what's going on with AI. It's only getting better and better. You should want to be a holistic marketing partner for your clients. the the sooner you can understand that, I just think the better off you're going to be because there's this idea that like, yeah, sure, there's bigger direct response companies that want to hire copywriters, but how many of them are there? Like, in terms of people who actually understand direct response and actually understand copy, like I'll use VS Shred as an example, like we're in talks with them on something. So like Vshred, they understand that. But I when I think about the last 30 businesses I've spoken to, they don't understand that. They don't understand that copy is the main thing. That's why so our our partnership firm like what we do with companies, it's copy and systems. You have copy systems, which is funny. We talked about that before the call, but copy and systems, those are the only two things that that matter. What's the quality of your copy? What's the quality of your marketing systems? If you have those two things dialed, like you can scale. So the two points of leverage are going to exist in those two areas, right? So the first thing that I look at is their copy, their messaging. So easy easy wins is just like where are they making just the common messaging mistakes, right? Where is it just like difficult to understand? What you have to do when you look at someone's stuff is you have to like dumb yourself down a bit and people be like, "No, like I'm dumb enough, right? Like I can I can I've heard this before. I'm dumb enough. I can I can I can act as that. And it's just like you shouldn't want to do that. I don't get why you would want to say that that you're dumb. You should be intelligent and you can dumb yourself down as well. I It's an argument I got in with someone a couple months ago over this, but um you should be able to dumb yourself down to the the lowest IQ customer that you can imagine. Now, that may be hard, but you should act like you can. So, where are points in the video sales letter, in the sales letter, in the messaging, in the ads that you're just hitting this like like point where you're like, I don't understand what they're saying right now. Um, where are they using too big of language? Where are they tying in too many concepts? Where are there too many run-on sentences? So, what most people don't understand is they they believe IQ is like how smart someone is. IQ is about pattern recognition. So, I had a client where we were doing a private day in uh Nashville. Have you ever been to Nashville? Uh it's like a little mini southern Las Vegas. Basically, it's like a you know, you could you could go there and just like realize immediately what I'm saying. It's like a country uh everything's music, everything's live music. And there's this strip called Broadway. And so, he was asking me about IQ. And I said, "You know what? I know how to demonstrate this perfectly for you. It's about 11:00 a.m. right now. Let's go to Broadway." And so, Broadway at 11:00 a.m. on a Saturday. You would think it would be dead, right? No, it's completely packed with people who are going from bar to bar, getting drunk, going from, you know, different country bar to another. Yes, dude. Interesting. Yes, bro. And like people will be sloppy drunk at like 10:00 a.m. It's not like a pretty sight. But what I told him is I was like, "Okay, >> IQ is about pattern recognition. When you take an IQ test, what you're looking for is patterns, right? There's all these different little things, right? So what they're trying to see on an IQ test is how many patterns can you recognize that are visual, right? But more than anything, it's about understanding the holistic patterns of life. Usually high IQ people can see a lot of different patterns. So we walk down Broadway and I just told him, "Observe everything. Just observe everything. Don't don't judge yourself. Don't try and hyperfixate on anything. I want you to observe everything you possibly can." And he was like, "Okay." So we walked down Broadway. This guy's drunk. That guy's drunk. This guy's yelling at a cop. Blah blah blah blah. It's like Las Vegas. It's just it's crazy. We get to the end of the strip and we're there. I'm like, "What did you notice?" And he was like, "Well, there's like a lot of just like not really good decisions that people are making, right? And people are just drunk at 10:00 a.m. or 11:00 a.m. whenever we went out." And like I mean, it's just a lot of craziness and whatnot. And I asked him, I was like, "Do you think that these people that were on this on this strip that we just walked by, are they good at understanding the patterns of life?" And he was like, "Probably not. Their pattern recognition is at the level of, oh, I drink this, I get drunk and I have fun, right? Or we go here, fun, fun, right? Some people are on a bachelor party. They're not thinking, right? We're not we're not creating a general statement. We're just trying to kind of create a subjective view of everything. >> And so what I showed him and what I kind of was explaining to him is that most people, they don't have the ability to think two, three, four, five, six steps ahead. Just like most people in a game of chess can't think 2 3 4 5 6 steps ahead or moves ahead. Life is like that. So majority of those people that we saw at 11:00 a.m. getting drunk are going to tomorrow at 11:00 a.m. get drunk and tomorrow at 11 a.m. get drunk and they're always going to be focusing on that. So they're inability to understand the pattern that I'm getting drunk and this is probably ruining my life and draining my bank account. And then on top of that also like I'm not healthy right now. Like there was a lot of overweight people and everything. I was like that is low IQ. And so that exists in an experiential realm, right? But then as well it exists not only in like their principles and how they operate their life but even just like in basic stuff like the way they can read copy and with the way they can read in general. How many people are reading dsvki? How many people are reading Plato? Not a lot. Why is that? because there's a lot of run-on sentences with a lot of patterns inside of one pattern that's inside of a chapter of patterns and it requires you to have to have a ability to like read things that are difficult to understand. So if you ever read like people will read like Gary Halbert copy, why is Gary Halbert's copy like eight words long each sentence? Why? Why is that? Because he's optimizing for the lowest IQ individual that he can get. He's optimizing for the broad majority of people which are under 100 IQ. If you think about the bell curve, right? 100 is like the middle right there and then like 115 120 is right there. So let's just go from 115 to the left. Okay, that's like 75% of the population. Then from 100 to the left is like 50% of the population. So that's a lot of people in in America. 150 million people. Let's just say that because it's about 300 million people in the US. That's that's about 150 million people that do not have the ability to understand patterns and they don't actually they can't think about things in terms of patterns. So you have to keep it as simple. One point leads to the next point which is very simple and easy to understand. That's why we write like that when we're orientated towards a lower income, lower IQ. And there's studies that show this. Everyone gets super upset when I talk about this because it's oh it's racist or whatever. Like it's not racist or whatever or classist, but the the lower IQ someone is, the lower income they're going to have. Why is that? Well, it's becically proven. You can look up all this stuff, and I'm happy to send the studies afterwards, but you can literally see that it's your inability to understand your spending patterns, to understand, okay, how does a business work? Like, how do I increase my income? The patterns of your own life that are causing you to drop in performance, so you can't really exceed at the job. Like I could just go on and on and on about it. So that's the first thing that I look at with clients is where are they not speaking to the average individual? Where are they speaking over their head? Right? Where are they talking to the person in a way that doesn't actually appeal to them? That's the first thing in the copy. The second thing is where do I feel like there could be a little bit more clarity in what they're saying? So sometimes people will use a metaphor and like they're starting off the presentation or the VSSL or whatever with a metaphor and I'm like that's not a good metaphor. It's not visual. It's not descriptive. Doesn't really make a lot of sense, right? And so I'm like, we need to change this. Like they're using a metaphor for like a car engine. Like, okay, what percentage of the population actually understands how [___] engines work? Like they don't they don't even know that the concept it's like combustion and the engine and whatnot. If you were to pop up someone's hood, explain how this engine works to me. I I don't understand. But if you were to use something like baking a cake, okay, now we're we're talking like this is what most people can understand. So I look for that. And then as well like the offer, right? Where's there not clarity there? Where can we maybe make the offer a little bit juicier, a little bit sexier? How can we solve more problems and so on, right? And positioning. Maybe there's a specific form of position that they're not taking that we could be making. Maybe we're not speaking to the problem as a whole, etc., etc. Okay? So, there's that base level of what I'm looking at is just like where are they not doing a good job of just dumbing things down and making it super easy and simple for someone to understand. Low friction. We want it to be that someone watches it and just goes, "Uh-huh." Like we want them to literally just be like, "Yeah, that makes sense." Right? So that's the first layer. The next layer of that after that is looking at the actual campaign itself. Okay, so this is now where we start to step into systems. So okay, they I perfect example, we have a client right now that we're talking to, prospect, I should say. They're going to be a client, but prospect um they have it where they're only doing bottom off ofunnel campaigns. So, it's just, hey, if you're ready to buy, buy now. There's no middle offunnel campaign to nurture them. There's no top offunnel campaign to really like bring in their attention. It's just $10,000 product and they just send everyone to that and they're like, "Hey, our cost per book call is really high." Yeah, no [___] It's like you you are literally running to this percentage of the market and the buying cycle is 12 months. And so, you're getting people at the tail end of that, but then like you're not retargeting them. You're not really making an effort to to nurture these people. you're not bringing them into your ecosystem. You're not collecting their emails, etc., etc. So, that would be like from a campaign structure perspective, what are they doing wrong? Okay, maybe they're not really focusing on any of that top of funnel, middle of funnel, bottom of funnel. But also on top of that, maybe the messaging in the campaigns, going back to that first tier, maybe the messaging in the campaigns, they're they're running a bottom offunnel offer, but then they have top offunnel messaging and they're running a a top offunnel uh campaign, but it's bottom offunnel messaging. So, the difference between the two is awareness level. So, anyone who's read Breakthrough Advertising knows this, but you basically go from solution unaware uh or uh solution unaware, what is that? Solution unaware, problem unaware, solution unaware, brand unaware, product unaware. Then it goes to problem aware, solution unaware, so on and so forth. And then they move further into the awareness spectrum. So you have to understand that like levels one, two, and three are like the top of funnel. And then levels three and four are the middle of funnel and then level five is the bottom of funnel. And so you have to understand how to run the campaigns that way. So that's the next level is looking at that >> and coft that that's actually how you end up writing the headlines and and leads and and everything that gets attention in the first place. So it's like >> know where they're at. Yeah. Cuz if someone has no idea about the problem, I'm not just going to be like finally the product like no, they don't even need to know that. They need to understand what their problem is. Then from there, what I'm looking at is like, okay, I have a good understanding of the copy. I have a good understanding of the overall like marketing systems that they have in place, but I want to get more granular. Okay, do they even have email in place? I'm shocked at how many people don't use email still. It's just it's ridiculous. I'm sure even big guys. >> Oh, no. Even big even big businesses, they got like an amazing eight figure launch and their emails is >> they don't even have abandoned card properly set up, you know? >> Yeah. Yeah. So, I'll look at emails. I'll look at um the overall like fulfillment structure on things like are you putting the offers in front of them? Again, are you calling the leads? Like I've seen that so often. Someone buys a low ticket product, they're moving them to a 2K product or then a 10K product and no one's calling the people that literally are giving you their name, address, email, phone number. What are we doing here? Like this is just silly, especially in 2025. Like you have to call the people. You have to call them. So do we have a proper sales team in place? Do we are the sales people actually doing what they need to do? And I'll go I'll go to the messaging here in a moment, but because we're in systems right now. Then the last component of it, this is where I have media. I I I handle media because it's just it's the easiest win. No one wants to run the ads. And when you're like, I'll take responsibility for the ads. Yeah. >> You're a lot more you're a lot more successful with clients. >> I want to ask you later about this. So, I'm going to actually take a little note here. Like, why don't people want to run ads? But let me let me get back to that in a bit. Yeah. >> Yeah. So, I have a media buyer who's an absolute genius. His name is also Nick, funny enough, which is like we we were like, should we just only hire Nicks inside of the company? That'd be hilarious. It be very difficult for meetings, but um he's an absolute wizard. So, I send him on the campaign and give give him access to the Facebook ad account, the meta ad account, and I'm just like, can you go through and just like check whatever is there something wrong with the structure or whatnot? He'll usually find two to four issues. They're not properly set up to high. Right? These are like the last string of problems, okay? >> And it really shows like where they're not tracking things properly. They're not running the campaigns properly. They're not setting things up properly. Okay? >> So you have this whole like think about it like a pyramid, right? An inverse pyramid of all the issues and it's almost like think about a funnel, right? So a funnel has this point where there's what we call the bottleneck, right? You have to identify where is the bottleneck. I find that more often than not, it's at that first and second level that I told you about. So the bottleneck is going to be at the messaging itself, right? And then you have it where the next part of it is going to be the systems and the way that the campaign structured. And then you have it after that, right? Where it's like the the granular systems and then it's the ad account. So here's a perfect example for you. If I have three machines, okay, and they have an input output focused. Machine number one can do 100 outputs per hour. And then machine number two can do a 100 outputs per hour. And machine number three can do 50 outputs per hour. How many outputs per hour can I get? >> 250. >> 50. >> You mean like like one by one like or like separate in separate 100? >> I mean think about it. 100 can move to 100 and then is bottlenecked by 50. >> Oh, okay. Like in an auto like in an automation line. Okay. Yeah. I thought you meant like three separate lines. Okay. No, no. All connected together, right? That's what ends up happening. So, that's >> that's how we look at the company. What I mean by looking for the needles and this will tie it in. This isn't like an easy thing to explain to people. So, if they're looking for like a low IQ Gary Halbert explanation, I'm I'm sorry, I haven't figured out how to do it yet, but it's just like you're looking for where's the bottleneck. That's the needle. That's the first thing that you have to fix inside of the campaign. That's the first thing you have to fix inside of their systems. So, we look for that.

And usually if it's at the bottom on the messaging, the big mistake that I see copywriters make is they're like, "Oh, well, I'll go do my research now." And they go to like Reddit and they go to like Quora and they go to like Amazon book reviews. I used to do this for years and they think this is where I should do my research. This is this is like copper level research. You want to be at gold tier standard research. So, if someone hasn't bought the product, if someone hasn't put their credit card where their mouth is, because no one uses cash anymore, right? But it's like if someone hasn't used their credit card, put it in, bought the product. I don't want to take their opinion into account because everyone has an opinion. Everyone like I've had it where, you know, clients will be like, uh, oh, you know, this guy said this to me. I'm like, is he a customer? No, who cares? Don't listen to them. If the customer says something, it's more valuable because we want to optimize for the customers. So, what we do is we go look at sales calls. We go and talk to the customers. Like we have it with this prospect where we're going to literally get on five to 10 calls with her best clients and talk to them. We optimize for check-in forms as well. Like if you're in a coaching program and there's a form that people can check in. Perfect example is this. We have a client right now is doing around like 600k a month. And when I came in, they were doing like 60k a month. This is probably like 3 years ago. So came in, redid all their messaging, they're now at 600K a month. They 10xed their business effectively. And basically what they saw was that the messaging that we created was resonating a lot with their audience a lot. And so they started doing it where all of the exercises and everything was kind of orientated around the messaging. So when people checked in, the first module they had was like a diary entry thing. This is this is this is evil in terms of like how to get really really good >> market research and Yeah. So, they would basically fill in this journal entry, like a type form of like how they're feeling, what the emotions are. And they were just like, "Use this as like your daily diary or whatnot." And so, here we are now 2 and a half years later, and we have 9,670 entries inside of this type form. And so what I do is I go through that, I process that with AI and I get messaging buckets from it and I'm able to see what are the consistent things that the buyers are saying, the people who have the money to purchase the stuff because the people who are on Reddit, I mean, I don't know if you've spent any time on Reddit, but it's like they're just perpetual complainers. So, you're going to speak to those people and you're like going to attract those people, but they're not saying the same thing as the people who literally have just dropped $10,000 or $5,000 or $200, whatever it is. So, you want to optimize for what the customers are saying. And so, it's setting up and a lot of times clients don't have that in place. They don't have some form of check-in. They don't have some sort of survey. They're not reaching out to the customers and getting on interviews with them. And, you know, a perfect example is people be like, "Well, we run an ecom product. We can't do that." I'm like, "Have you tried?" because you'd be shocked if you just reach out to the customers and just say hey we'd love to get on with you 10 20 minute call and just hear your thoughts on the product and how it's helping you and what you would like better from our company like do I need to give a gift call gift card or coupon code I'm like no you really don't like people just want to be heard so if you just reach out to them schedule 10 to 20 of those calls record all of them get the transcripts proc them process them through AI you will get way better data than if you spend hours on research so that's how we fix that bottom tier problem the the main bot bottleneck I see which is people's messaging and then from there everything else is is it's just understanding systems and understanding where the inefficiencies are and how to fix them. So that's what I'm doing when I come into a company. It's a it's a long- winded answer but it's not easy. That's why we get paid the big bucks because we solve big problems. We don't solve little problems like I increase their open rate.

Cool man that's great. That's a good entry-level thing to focus on. But revenue is what the companies care about and revenue is a aftereffect of throughput of the marketing system and the sales team. And if it's not a sales team, then it's the the actual product itself being sold. >> Yeah, I like it. And I think the thing that a lot of people need to take away from this for sure is that there's a lot of fundamentals that you're implementing just at a very you just don't skip any of the steps. And that's really what systems are all about, isn't it? It's like you could say awareness levels. I mean, how many people throw that that word around and and how many people actually use it? Like, do you like they say, "Oh, we're using awareness levels. We're talking to solution aware audience and then I see that their their subject line is is is like is a product subject line or something." Let's just I mean, when we're talking copy and it's like the it's like they put the word of the offer in the title. Like, why are you doing that? If you told me that this this offer solution away, why aren't you coming up with a message that talks to people where they're at? if that's the email and and what you said about research as well. It's like I look at I mean I do this I'll I'll reveal my secret. You know when I work with my private copyrightiting clients one of the first things I put them through is you know like itemize exactly where you're at in your business like kind of what you're struggling with what are the goals you know all the things that they we're going to look at on a one-on-one call. But I've got all that information. I mean, all of my personal marketing research for for the copyrightiting marketplace is all just 200, 300 private, you know, questionnaires that I've, you know, processed and like made sure that those guys, they shared what they were struggling with. I know what copyrighters struggle with because it's exactly that. But it's it's it's simple. It's simple, but it's like how many people will do it? How many copyrighters are going to get on the phone, you know? That's the thing, >> dude. That's the metaphor for life. Yeah. This is what this this is every area of life. So like a perfect example of this is like the gym. So I love the gym. I mean it's like it's the perfect perfect metaphor for life. So a lot of people will do all this fancy crap at the gym. They watch guys like Jeff Nippard and all these like science-based lifters and they're doing all these just I don't even know what to call it, but it's just dummy lifts. And they're like, "Oh, I'll change this protocol and and I'll optimize this and and I'm going to use this supplement and do all that." And it's like you're majoring in the minors. You're focused on the things that don't matter. Only things that matter in lifting is number one, the intensity of the lifts, staying consistent on a program for like three to four months before you change anything, and then nutrition and rest. That's it. There's really nothing else to it. If you did the most basic workout of like bench, squat, and then like some accessories and some like overhead press stuff and whatnot, and then you did it with very basic supplementation like creatine and protein powder, and then you got really good diet, you understood your macros, and you hit those properly, and then you did proper recovery where you were resting and not working out seven days a week like a madman because if you're not on gear and you don't on steroids, like you shouldn't be doing that. Um, if you just did those four basic things, you would make more progress in 3 months than a year of doing all the other crap. So, that applies as well to business. That applies, I think, to relationships. Like, for instance, how I've seen this all the time where guys are like, "Oh, I need to take her on dates and I need to get her these things and I need to do all this stuff." But then it's like, you know, when a their their woman's problems pop up, right? they're going immediately into problem solving mode for the girl versus like okay how about you just sit with her and be like I'm really sorry that you're feeling that way like how is this you want to talk more about how this is affecting you do you need support right now or do you want feedback what do you need from me right now right like just being able to slow down that's the basics right of understanding communication so everyone goes to these like little degrees of optimization in everything in life that just like not it's not necessary realistically until you're at the top top top top >> yeah it's the top 1% only when you're competing on those little things and it actually starts to matter >> and and you'd be shocked how few clients you're going to get like that like even big clients they don't >> but I mean you can't usually right because it's like by the time that they're ready for the 1% optimizations the market has slightly shifted its interest so then you have to go back to the fundamentals again right like that's how I always see it because >> somebody will come in you know I used to do this Nick I used to come into guys businesses and and optimize their email marketing you know come in and do all the sequences and the broadcast emails and make sure the messaging refct fix everything. And I would actually build the email auto automations based on awareness levels typically uh like reverse engineer the the psychographic awareness level based on where they're at in the funnel. And I got so granular and I was quite proud of my little system, you know, >> but what I what I found out Yeah. I mean, you know, like I I liked it, you know, it gave me a little bit of an ego boost and like I enjoyed that little >> Yeah, this is so smart everything. >> Yeah. Yeah. You know, like we all go through that phase, right? I mean, and some people don't gra some some people don't graduate from it, but you know, I try my best to, you know, focus on the stuff that actually matters and get the client results instead of just feeling good. So, I would do it, right? Okay. So, I did it. And then what I found is every single time I'd sit there trying to optimize that last, let's say, 10%. >> Their funnel changes every single time I had the emails perfect, they're like, "No, we've just added >> like AI new offer." >> Yeah. We or like we redid the webinar, there's the new mechanism. And I'm like, so you got to like, okay, so I got to go basically >> now I got to change 80 emails 100%. >> Exactly. So that that like that's what ended up happening for me is I kept having clients that would change the front end and that would never get to finish the back end. And so then I was like, okay, so then so then we're looking at the wrong problem if we're trying to take everything to this perfect level. What we're actually looking at is we actually should, like you said, you need you go look for that the needles or the the levers that you can pull. >> And it's always about finding the lever. It's not about taking things to 99% to 100% perfection. It's about what's that number one biggest thing right now that's creating the bottleneck for everything. Fix that and then fix the next one and fix the next one and then it it flows. Um, one thing I want >> you have to know you have to know how to find those. That's that's the main thing. You have to find them. You have to know what they are. And I think a lot of guys are like they they don't realize though that experience is what trumps everything. So you have to have the experience to know what happens when you push this Jenga cube out. What what pops out on the other side. So it's like I I I tell a lot of guys that, you know, you can't replace years of experience and falling on your face and making mistakes. I've I've lost clients I've lost clients to a thing I said, not even to like performance. Like we have a client where we made them $1.5 million with a VSSL. Okay, they didn't have the VSSL before. the VSSL is now cash collected $1.5 million. And because I said something that was maybe a little bit aggressive inside of our Slack chat, uh they they fired me and went with someone else. >> And it's like >> I should ask you what you said. >> Um yeah, so basically they were like asking me they were like, "Oh, you know, we're really wanting to hire for this position." And we're like," because I'd just done the project for it was like a done for you project versus like agency. And then they were considering who they're going to have run it. And uh you know I was like yeah I mean I'm the most qualified to run it because I built it right and I understand how to run the system properly. And then afterwards they're like okay well we're still looking at a couple candidates. And I just told them I was like okay I mean like hey if you're considering other people it's because I'm not a good fit. So I would just go with them over me. And then they just immediately like they didn't like that. They were like I was really taken back by that comment and it really struck me. They were like >> culture culture culture. Yeah. Yeah. Yeah. Yeah, >> but I think I think clients like you know clients at the same time they I mean how do I say it? It's like if you're if you're a business owner, you're running an offer, okay? Unless you're an internet marketer and you you've come from being a freelance marketer or something first, it's better to just like trust the marketing guys that come into the business to do the marketing side of things. Like you live it every single day. you've done it for hundreds of businesses and and they might be so much more focused on fulfillment and on what they're up to. Um, but but you know, I mean, you'll get clients that want to kind of know and and own every sort of department and they can actually be quite difficult to work with because they always have to come in and change something, you know. So, yeah, that makes sense though. Um, I wanted to say something about the the IQ thing cuz I've also thought about this because I used to say that, you know, similar to what you say, uh, you know, like there's a lot of these guys, they they don't have the pattern recognition and and I realized something as well recently that actually makes it even easier for me to to think about this because I also like to think that there's also the balance of like wanting to know that the customers are smart or like you know the the buyer is is not some random person. It's um what's that quote? What's that quote? the it's like it the customers are >> buyers your mother. >> Yeah. Yeah. Or something like that, right? So it's like, well, how do I how do I reconcile the two? It's like, well, it's very simple. People are very busy, too. So, if you're 100% focused on something, your pattern recognition is also better. But when you're going about your day-to-day life and you're not paying attention to stuff, you also don't have the bandwidth. So, I find a lot of people that buy stuff, even if they have a very high IQ, when they're in that consumption mode, when they're scrolling and they see an ad, they're not using 100% of their their focus and attention. So, you you you can't talk to them even at their actual let's say they're 130 IQ. They're actually going to behave like somebody with 90 IQ just simply because they're on the train or because they're they're making food in the kitchen or something. It's like they're not even paying attention to the same level anyway. So, if anybody here Yeah. If anybody here feels like, oh no, I don't want to be disrespect disrespectful to my my prospects. It's like this is not what it's about. It's about the fact that people are busy. A large amount a large amount of the market is actually got a lower IQ and that's okay. It's just the data is in. And the people that do have a high IQ are actually also like not paying attention. So like they're also going to not really give their quality. Like you you can speak like that to people and it's okay. >> Yeah. I can tell you that like from my own personal experience like I used to think like it's like this white knight kind of syndrome where you're like I want to you want to go against what human nature is and you want to you want to do it the way you think it is and like you want to optimize for UI like let's just be honest if you're a copywriter and you're into the concept of marketing psychology which is a whole another concept we can my my problems with that we can go into that but if you're into copywriting and you you like writing and you you like reading, you like studying, you need to understand that not a lot of people think that way. Perfect exercise is if you're in the US, go to Costco. Go to Costco and and ask yourself if you think these people are really trying to better themselves on a day-by-day basis. Are these people really trying to push themselves intellectually? Are these people really trying to strive for more? And what you'll wake up to is the human nature that most people orientate themselves towards homeostasis, just maintaining. And and it's a waking up moment to go, "Oh, I shouldn't I shouldn't fight against this." I and you don't need to make it this cynical thing. Like I see this with a lot of copyriters where they get cynical about it. That's why I don't like majority of the industry is these guys manipulate in a negative way. I think manipulate is a neutral word in that like I can take this wallet right here, right, and I move it up. I've just manipulated it. I can take it, put it down, I've manipulated it, right? So you can manipulate in a neutral way. But a lot of these guys, they are they are predatory on low IQ people in that they lie to them. That's where it's an issue. But like, okay, perfect example. There's this great company. You guys can look it up. It's called Minerals. So, it's M nes and genius marketing campaign. I've been seeing their stuff. I kind of want to buy it honestly just because I like their product but or their marketing. But it's like it's saying this isn't your mom's supplement, right? This is for men, not soy boys. And like they know their audience. They're speaking to like the conservative male who's like, "Haha, yeah, man." Who's like they they know who they're talking to. And it's not a complicated thing that they're selling, right? It's like minerals in pill form that's like really good for your body. It's to blast your testosterone so you can get hair on your nuts and whatnot. Like it's just like stuff like that. And and you think you're like, "Oh man, like they're speaking down to people." >> Bro, we read it and we laugh and we're like, "I'll buy it. That's funny." You know, it's like that that's the reality of how this works is you just meet people where they're at. You're actually probably uh I think people think they're being virtuous by thinking what you're thinking. Oh, I don't I don't want to do that, right? I don't want to optimize for that. You're actually like not doing a service to the you're doing a disservice to the people that you're writing to and that you're creating marketing for. So, you know, I realized this eventually like it really became clear to me when I started studying philosophy and I started to realize that like what Plato and Aristotle and Socrates were all talking about like Plato said man does not want to take on the burden of the mind. They don't want to take on the burden of the mind. The same thing that happened in the years of of these Socratics and prescratics is the same thing we have today. The masses just want like basic comforts, right? they just want bread and they want the circus and they don't really want to have to struggle all that much. But when you're kind of in like a pseudo entrepreneurial role as a as a freelancer and then eventually you move on to running the business and you're doing like a actual entrepreneurial venture. Um what you'll realize is that you're in the minority. Most people don't want that. You know, it's like I go to my church for instance. I love my parish and I love the people that are there. But I remember sitting down with a group of them at like a men's retreat we were doing and one of them said, "Yeah, the only way that you can get ahead financially is you have to screw someone over and like that's the belief that he holds." And we were all just kind of sitting there and you know, no one really said anything about it. Some people were like, "Yeah, I agree with that." Right? And the majority of these guys that I talked to love them, love them. But I realized that like they don't have the mindset that is required to run a business that is required to get ahead. And you know it it's okay. You can't put that on everyone else. So if you're the individual that's listening to this and you're like but I want to be intellectual. I want to be smart. Like I want to grow myself. I want to push myself. You need to understand that's great and you should focus on that yourself. But to put that on other people, you are being delusional. That's not how majority of people think. And the sooner that you accept that, the better off you're going to be as a marketer. >> Yeah, I agree with you. And you know, when I see people here as well, like I'm in Cape Town right now. I mean, I've heard that same expression here, >> and that's on the other side of the world. So, it's like, well, >> it's no different. >> Is that Is that something that people said on TV? Where does that come from? I mean, like, I can't think of a movie that says that specifically. So, like a lot of these little things that we all think like all these truisms or what people say that they they hold deeply, I can't actually find the origin of. I've I've actually thought about it and it's like a lot of the stuff. >> Yeah. just heard it from someone. >> It's just somewhere. It's somewhere, you know, but it's like but that's but it's in the it's in the the you know the the collective consciousness that people think this way, right? And >> if you're somebody that really wants to, you know, have more for yourself and and create more for yourself and, you know, I'm I'm a I'm a big uh I like to create stuff. Like I like to express myself through creating things. I'm a creative person. You know, that's I like problem solving, but I like creative stuff. So for me, a lot of money is is an is an opportunity for me to express my creativity because I have these resources to invest back into creating stuff. You know, I enjoy that. Um, and so for me, that's kind of how I'm in I'm I'm in this game. But if you're somebody that's getting into this and you have your reason and you you look at other people and you want to try and get them involved or tell them, you know, think about how hard it is for you to change yourself. you know, how many podcasts you're listening to, how many books you've read, how many courses or coaches that you've invested in just to change the majority of people aren't >> and it's like it's hard enough it's hard enough for you to even do it for yourself and now you're going to go and interfere with somebody else's free will to do what they want to do. I think it's just I mean, let them do what they it you didn't need that. That's that's my thing. I always realize like every single person I've talked to that has done something in this space that they're proud of, nobody needed to actually convince them to get into this. They were f they were they were they were looking. You know what I mean? They were looking whether they came in through some bisop course, whether they found it by themself. They were the one looking. Nobody said to them. Nobody took them and and shook them and like you must do this, you know, cuz cuz I used to do that. I used to tell people like, oh, you know, you got to you got to get into this industry cuz this is where it is. And and I just realized, you know, um you look at I mean, you look at bisop, you look at the success rate in bisop. I used to think that you have control over this. I I honestly used to think this. And it's like I look at the data and the data for the success rate in bisop is like very very close to just general data on wealth. Like if you look at how many people become millionaires, the data is like very close to the bisop success rate. I thought that was fascinating cuz I used to be like that. I used to try and have the sort of I wouldn't I don't know if the white knight complex. I don't usually use that word but you know you used it makes me think white knight. It's like I used to want to come in here and and think everything I'm doing should be this like really Yeah. Yeah. But like you know and then I got very disappointed and I felt bad for a while because I was selling these bizarre products and I was like man I don't know and then I just realized you know what it's not actually it's not actually that the change that you create is you know you you cannot like change the data set of human beings that that that's the way they want to operate. All you can do is target the people that you're actually targeting. If you're in Bizop, for example, you know, and there some guys, some guys they they'll they'll they'll blame the the customer or whatever. But anyway, anyway, I think that a lot of cooperators actually, this is the kind of stuff what we're talking about now. I think this inner stuff is is the reason why a lot of them don't make 10, 20, 30K because they come up with all these sort of like they they moralize they moralize the money making. they moralize the the service that they're doing and they turn it into something that well it's it's really not appropriate. It's like we're talking about a funnel, we're talking about optimizing messaging, we're talking about selling a product that's already working. You got to double down there and just fix the stuff that's that's like creating the the constraints in the business. Oh no, you know, this this business is not exactly aligned with what I want for my my career. You know, I I want to be a ads guy and only the health niche or this and that niche. And it's like you're creating all these you're creating all this stuff that gets you stuck, you know? >> Yeah. I mean, I here's here's my thoughts on that, man. I mean, like I I don't think a lot of I think in general the population, but even coming down to copywriters, you know, people who are like trying to start their own agency, people who are starting their own business, I I don't think they actually know how to think. And this is kind of what is a big waking up point for most people is asking yourself the question, why do I believe what I believe? And then actually being able to attack your own position. So most people are just in a perpetual like self-confirmation loop. And so they just want to confirm themselves because like I said with Plato's quote, the labor of the mind is the ability to challenge oneself. So, if you study philosophy, actual philosophy, I'm not talking about like low tier Jordan Peterson stuff because he there's a million in one issues with how he goes about setting things up. Like, >> I should just clip that. I should just clip that without context and post that as a short, you know, everybody upset. Yeah. >> Yeah. I mean, everyone wants to slurp Jordan Peterson. They're like, "Oh, he's so smart. You know, he's this." Majority of Jordan Peterson's claims are based on Yungian psychology. And okay, well then let's look at the presuppositions that you walk into when you believe Jung. Jung at the end of his life lost his mind. Jung was literally carving like things. I think it was like fish into into stone. He he was out of his mind at the end of his life. Majority of his books as well. And it's so funny. I I see people talk about Yungian psychology and then they've never actually read any books from Carl Young. They just base it off of like YouTube lectures. go read Jung's books and read like a couple spaced out papers for between a couple of years and you'll realize that this dude was just kind of trying to figure it out as he went along. So like a perfect example is AON. If you go read AON and you read what he's talking about, tell me if you really fully understand what he's saying, you you can't. And people would go, "No, I do get it. I remember once we went to a um a Jordan Peterson event, me and a um a friend and um there was this lady next to us, you know, Jordan's he's on stage and he's like, "Well, you know, you're d and he's doing all of his stuff." He's like, "You put it together and you inspect it and like where does this come from?" It's like, "Wow, right." So, he's doing this whole like metaphysical impression, you know? Right. And like the this thing over and over again. He's painting with words, right? And this lady next to us is going, "Uh-huh." >> Mhm. Yeah. And my buddy and I looked over at her and we were like looking at each other like I'm not understanding [__] this guy's saying right now and like this lady right here is and I posted this on Facebook and everyone came at me. You don't know she could be a philosophy major. You and then my buddy backed me up in the comments. the guys she wasn't like I'm telling you that this is just like people are trying to act like yes I understand it but if we really go down to you know for instance yung yian belief okay psychology in general I said earlier I have a problem with psychology is that it it's not a hard science so you have like the story for instance of the um the alcoholic father where it's like you have two sons you have one who became wildly successful and structured and goes to church and has family and everything and the other one became homeless and you ask both of them well why did you end up here and they both say well how could I not my father and so it's like there yeah there's no hard science to it psychology is really just about kind of being able to observe and there's some utility to it but there's no epistemic foundation there's no epistemology to it whatsoever because it's just what one guy said and so if I go and I look at like Freud or I go at Nietze or I go in Jung would you really want to listen to these guys Like are they people that if you actually studied their character and studied where they ended up in life, all of them lost their mind pretty much. If you go and study them Yeah. Oh, literally every single one of them. You can go look this up. Every single every single psychologist major psychologist. Kant, Nietze, Jung, all these different guys, even Maslau, all these guys at the end of their life kind of like lost their mind a bit. And it's it's like Kant, for instance, couldn't even leave his home. He couldn't even go like a mile outside of his home, I believe. And so what you have to look at is are these people's models of reality, which is what they're putting out there, what are they based on? They're based on presuppositions that they go into. And like for instance, you look at Freud, like Freud was kind of like your your classic s kind of like he was just getting just just crushed by women over and over and over again. Like and so of course he has all of these theories about why people are the way they are. It's like the red pill guys. these guys that are like, "Yeah, women women are like this and that." And then it's like, "Okay, what's your foundation?" And it's like, "Well, I'm divorced." Yeah. Oh, what a surprise that you think this way. >> So, so you you have to approach things like a if you actually want the truth, which is, you know, you say this and I want the truth. And it's like, do you really do you really want to go through the labor of this? Because you'll you will really have to push yourself to understand these things. But it's it's understanding what is the epistemological foundation of what I believe. In other words, what is the validation of it? So like you see this with religion. So a lot of people will like well I I'm I'm Christian. And then I'm like okay what type of Christianity do you follow? What denomination? I'm Protestant. Okay. Why are you Protestant? And then it's just silence. And they're like well because Jesus Christ is king. That doesn't mean that you're Protestant. Why are you Protestant? Why are you non-denominational? and you they can't give you an answer because they again just like how we were talking about um earlier people just kind of repeat things that they hear online, right? They they they're not really thinking through it. Versus if you actually go and do your research and you understand how the church was formed and you understand how the actual like original um uh ecumenical councils actually started. you understand how we actually started the church, where the church came from, how we started the doctrines, how we went about it, why Roman Catholicism split, how pretty much every predom every denomination of Christianity is kind of like a offspring of Catholicism, Roman Catholicism, and that orthodoxy is pretty much like the only one who really didn't change the original, you know, doctrines that we set in place. Well, then it becomes, okay, well, what are you following? And then, oh, I'm Catholic. Why are you Catholic? Well, because we need to have the pope. why and then you just you realize most people don't go down two three four five layers of why. So perfect. For instance, let's now talk because we're going kind of high metaphysics. Let's go into like more theology than anything, but like let's let's now go into like granular day-to-day. Okay. Client, I need a low ticket ascension funnel. Why? >> Well, I've just been seeing other people do it. Okay. So, now >> Yeah, that's basically why. Yeah. >> I'll I'll explain this at like a a level that maybe people can take something tactical from this. Okay. So, when you're in debate, what you have to do is identify the position that someone has. So there's really only three positions that people can take on. Okay? And I I'm not a I don't have a masters in philosophy. So there may be someone who knows way more about me about this than me, but you can go and look up what I'm talking about. They are either going to take an empiricism position, meaning what is observable, they are going to take a rational uh position, which means what is based on principles, or they are going to take a mechanism uh uh position, which means based on process. So these are the original three uh uh pcratics that most people know about. Thales, an Axeamander and amenities. These are the main ones that kind of like kicked off philosophy. >> What's the first one again? You say the first one is based on observation, right? >> So that one would be empiricism. >> Okay. So observation then principles and process. Okay. >> Yeah. Well, observation. So it's empiricism, rationale, uh rationalism and then from there um mechanism. >> Mechanism. Okay. >> What do what do all copywriters write? >> Unique mechanism. So they explain everything with a unique mechanism. Well, if you start to understand human nature, you realize that 80% of women are I'm using a paro principle here. So 8020 80% of women fall into the empiricism category, whereas 20% will fall into rationalism or into mechanism. So, if you're writing an offer for women and you're using mechanism and rational like like principles, rationalism, well, you're just cutting out 80% of the market. And so, it's like that's not how women think. Women think based off of what they're observing. >> This is crazy. >> So, whenever Yeah. Whenever you're talking to a client, they say, "Oh, well, I need a low ticket ascension funnel." You have to identify the position. And I don't mean to just go into like like let's let's get into their get into debate with them. No, but this is important to understand why someone has the thought so you can understand how to not I'd say attack, but it's not really attack, but it's how to kind of poke holes in the thought so they can see it. So, they say I need a low ticket ascension funnel. And you're like, why do you believe that? Well, I've been seeing these ads for it and I just see everyone doing it. Empiricism. Okay. Have you been able to see their back end though on what's happening after that? Uh, no. Well, have you seen like kind of the ascension process that these guys have and that they also a lot of them are selling like a bisop on the side of it and that on top of that they have like a long nurture cycle on it. Uh no, I'm not seeing that. Well, okay. Well, have you observed that? And so you're speaking in >> asking about obser Yeah, you're talking about observations back to >> you go into that. You have to break apart the argument from empirical. What are they observing? So then from there you can go into okay well so we we've established that we haven't really seen that but are you aware of like the mechanism of how these work in that we have to do a low ticket product we have to first come up with that product then we need an upsell so we need to have an upsell that goes into that and then we have and you go all this like this is realistically a 3 to sixmonth project and right now you have a funnel that's working and we can optimize that's already here we're now over on rational so it's like this principle that I'm focused on is that why don't we optimize what's already working and then on the back end if you'd like to build something like this out I can quote you separate for that but we have to focus on this right here. So what you'll see is that most people don't know why they believe what they believe in a business context in a fitness context in a relational concept or context in in every area of their life they have these beliefs that they haven't thoroughly examined attacked and defended. Perfect example of this is um the transcendental argument for God. Are you familiar with tag? >> And this is this is transcendental argument for God, right? >> Yeah. Yeah. >> I might be. I'm not sure. No, I don't know. >> Yeah. So, basically what it is is that logic can't exist without a creator. There has to be some root cause for everything in the world. And so what there is is God. So then the next level of that is the person that will debate that a secular individual who's atheist or whatever will say well no logic can stand alone by itself and then you're like why and then they're like oh well because uh u well there's a mind right that we have but it's adapted for survival and so you know we have to take into account that the people who were able to have the best level of logic survive that's not true that's definitely not true today go to Costco like That's my That's my go-to statement there is go to Costco. Tell me if you >> go to Costco, man. >> Yeah. So, maybe that existed in the year two or something like that, but that definitely doesn't exist in 2025. So, you start to go into this like why are people atheists? And eventually what they what you arrive at is a stalemate of they have a found a foundational belief that is based on what? It's based on oh no, I disagree, right? But there's no explanation to it just is. That's their argument. It just is, right? Logic just is. So, what's a better position to have? It just is. Or there's a cause. Because everything has a cause in the world. I don't like this thing right here, this like jar of knickknacks, it dropped. Why? Because I dropped it. Why is there gravity? Well, because of the planets and okay, well, why does that exist? What an atheist will arrive at is, well, that's just the way it is. Whereas, what the transcendental argument for God creates for you is that there's now a clear origin point. And they'll be like, well, that's circular. No, dummy. It's transcendental. It's that it is literally the core. It's the Yes, it's circular in that everything's circular at the end. It's like if you a child keeps asking you why, what are you going to arrive at? Why is the sky blue? Why is this? Why is that? Eventually, it's what? Well, it just is the way it is. Okay, well, that's not a really good answer. The kids got to get confused. But when you end it with, well, that's the way God designed it. Now, it's like, okay, we have a clear answer. So, either people will validate that or they won't. But you have to ask yourself what makes more sense to you. So I think that this is the like people will say what's the best copywriting book to study. I will not tell you to go to a copywriting book like obviously go and read you know breakthrough advertising and read you know some of the basics and whatnot so you can understand the structure and how it works and understanding how to do a bridge and whatnot. Like all that's important but more than anything like if you really want to get good at copy study how people think. study why you believe what you believe because I can go into any any offer any offer and beat the control. And the reason why is because I just look at the position they're taking. Perfect example of this um I was looking at um one of these clients, they're like a nine figure company in the health space and they they are absolutely crushing it and they want me to come in and beat their VSSL control and I go and look at their argument. What's cuz a VSSL is an argument why you should buy my product and I go and look at it and it's like what I was saying earlier they are taking an a a rationalism and a mechanism perspective and it's like okay but you're not and we looked at their VSSL so they have in the beginning this like big opening line about like the current state of like GLP1s and like OMIC and whatnot and they're talking about how oh you see all these celebrities using this and whatnot and you're seeing people lose weight but like you don't know that there's a lot of like unproven in trials and people are having all these health complications pop up and their retention in that first couple of minutes when they're talking about that is logic based. It's logic. >> No, no, no, no. It's it's not. It's that it's it's it's empiricism based. It's observed, right? You're seeing the language they're using. So, so their retention rate was literally like they're losing maybe 10% of the audience, which is very impressive people. Okay. >> Yeah. But then what happens is the moment that they move into now speaking in terms of principles and then as well in terms of the mechanism the system that they do what happens boom just immediately goes down from like 80 90% to like 30 20%. Why is that? Well, it's because that's not how women think. That's not how they think. You're you're literally trying to insert like a a a a box into a circle. It doesn't like a it's it's that's not how it works. So what you would do is I was like you need to focus on the observ the observable language right here's what you see right and then on top of that right you're seeing your friends some are going to yoga some are going here some are going there and you maybe are trying it for a couple weeks at a time here and there but you're not really seeing results and you're like you're trying to actually lose weight right you're doing the diets you're trying to eat clean right but something's not clicking what if there was something that you weren't really fully aware of yet but that simply implemented This way of living, this way of running your life with your fitness got you better results. And it wasn't something that you had to wait 6 months or 12 months for, but something that you could see actually pretty quickly just by implementing very very simple steps into your day-to-day routine. Things that you could do on a daily basis. You wake up and so notice how everything I'm saying. >> Exactly. That's how women think versus if I were to go towards men, I would go 100% into principles and into mechanism because that's how they think. That's how that's how men think. We need even just go back to the year five. Okay, we're in villages and whatnot. So, we're in the year five. Okay, so we have a group of women. We have a group of men. Okay, the men have to do what? We got to go hunt and kill something. Okay, so let's just imagine this is the first time we have to go hunt and kill something. All right, that didn't work. We didn't kill the moose. Oh [___] Okay, so what do we do? We need to develop a better system for hunting, but also we need to hunt together as a unit because we're more effective when there's like five to 10 of us than if there's one of us. So, we need to learn how to hunt together as a unit. Okay, we've now gotten the hunting component down, but now what's happening is that our tribe is getting attacked while we're hunting by the other tribe. So, we have to go and we need to create a perimeter around our our our village. And so half the company needs to be company half of the village needs to be out hunting and half them need to stay and we need to have a constant perimeter around our village. Okay, we need to build up walls. Okay, now we have walls. Okay, now that we have walls and we have a consistent stream of food and we have this where we're taking care of, now what's happening is the men are actually well I am top hunter and I killed moo day so I am village leader. No, I killed moo day so I am village leader. Right. So now it's like who's the village leader? Okay, so we need to have a village leader. Well, how do we determine what a good village leader is? How do we know whether or not they should actually be the leader of the of the of the the village itself? Well, what we arrive to is like, okay, well, he needs to govern by what? Principles. And so then we start creating this philosopher king idea and and you you create tyrannical kings and like, we're not doing that again. Let's kill that guy. And so we go and do, right? So that's men. So what did we do? We created principles and we created systems and we followed these principles and these systems so that we were repeatable and we could get the result. Let's go to women. What were women during doing during this time? Okay, we need to figure out what blueberries are not poisonous and what blueberries are poisonous. Right? Those blueberries are poisonous right there. When John ate them, he died. Okay, but these blueberries right here, they're clean. Okay, cool. Hey, this she gave birth to the baby, but because we didn't like clean the baby afterwards, what ended up happening is the baby got really sick and the baby died. Hey, this point in the river does not have a really good stream of water, so we can't collect the water from here. But when we go further down to the river, there's more of a stream, so we actually have to walk over here, but we also need someone to take care of the kids. Okay, so I'm not saying that it's 100% in every direction. Men do need to think in what's observable. I killed this moose, but because we didn't take it back right away, the wolves got it. Okay. Well, that's empiricism, right? They could observe that, right? It's an 8020 thing. But what are people hardwired towards? They're going to be hardwired towards certain things. So, everything that I'm explaining, people be like, "Ah, what does this have to do with copyrighting and what does this have to do with with marketing?" Everything. Because you start to see why people make the decisions that they do. More importantly, you start to see why you make the decisions that you do. Why are you thinking that you should live in the city that you live in? Why are you thinking that you believe what you believe? Why are you thinking that what you're doing right now for client outreach is the best way to do it? Why so on and so forth? If you can learn how to straw man a position and how to steal maniposition and how to actually debate back and forth with yourself, you will very quickly be able to arrive at proper conclusions. Great book on this that I think more people should read is called The Road Less Stupid. And so what this book talks about I'll give you the summary. It's a great title, right? Um uh the the the concept of it is blocking out time to think. That's the whole book. >> And so what it is is you first think about what are the questions that I should ask. So let's say we have a problem. I can't acquire clients. Okay, I'm I'm struggling right now. I would write down I'd put a timer for 30 minutes and I'd write down all the questions that I should ask. Excuse me. all the questions I should ask in regard to this problem. Okay? And I'd write them all down. And then from there, I would pick one question and then I would set a timer for 60 minutes and I would give as many answers as I can to that problem. And then from there, at the end, I would look at all the answers I gave and I would be like, "Okay, which ones are the best ones? I believe this one, this one, this one." Then I would ask myself, why do I believe that? Do I have an actual epistemic? like do I have an actual foundation for what I believe or is it just hearsay and oh this is what I believe. So when you learn the different positions that people can take when you learn the understanding of why people believe what they believe when you understand why you believe what you believe what you start to see is for the first time you can kind of see the delusion that most people are in. And that's a powerful powerful place to be in because you'll realize that most people don't do this. Go to Costco. This is what you're going to see is just most people don't think thoroughly. That this is why so many people end up in bad positions. What do they say? I just wasn't thinking through. I just made a bad decision. Had you really thought that heroin was not a good idea, you probably wouldn't have done it. Right? But they weren't thinking. They were basing it off of, well, this is how I feel and I want to do it. Right? So, that's just kind of my belief is that like if you really want to get good at marketing, it's it's not about understanding all the little tiny like, okay, say this, say that. It's really about being able to come into a business, understand what are the what what is the stance that the customer h or the the client has. What's their position? I want to do this, this, and this. Is the position good or not? Sometimes it just is. And the data is that they're making a million dollars a month. So, it's like, yeah, we're not going to argue with that, right? But if they're like, oh, we want to do this, but we're stuck at 60K a month and we can't break past the ceiling. There is a problem with their position. Being able to identify problems in people's positions is a superpower, but it requires the labor of the mind. So, I have a presentation I'm giving in uh Florida next month and uh I don't think anyone from there will watch this. But essentially what uh I'm gonna say is I'm going to give them some AI tools and I'm going to show them how I'm using AI. But at the end I'm going to be like my top secret number one. No one talks about this. This is the best form of how to get really good at AI and no one talks about it. And they're going to be like, "Oh, I really want to know about this." Right? And at the end, the tool is going to be learn how to think, [__] learn how to think >> because when you can understand how to think and you can understand how to articulate yourself, like there's definitely going to be some younger guys that are watching this that are going to listen to how I'm articulating myself and they're going to be like, "Wow, I want to learn how to I want to learn how to talk like that. I want to have that stream of consciousness. I want to be able to do that." Well, you don't get that by not learning. Like I if you listen to uh calls from me from like 2017, I was an idiot. I had no idea what I believed. There was no ability to really articulate myself in any meaningful way. And so that starts with knowledge and understanding how to move knowledge to understanding through experience and then eventually over time acquiring wisdom. And all these things really stem from studying the people who know a lot more than you. Plato knows a lot more than you. Jesus knows a lot more than you. Study these people that are filled with wisdom and you you'll just see that you start to understand the world from a different perspective. the the biggest marketing hack is understanding the way things are, not how they appear to be. And if you could see that, like your ability to prompt, your ability to come up with angles, your abil Oh my goodness, dude. Like, you're just you're you're ahead of the curb. Cuz think about it, like the the dilemma now is not can you write copy or not. AI can write pretty dang good copy.

The dilemma is can you think properly about the concept, about the business, about the offer, about the audience. Can you think properly about them? So, I tell all my guys that come to me and are asking me for advice, like number one thing you should be doing at all times is you should be really intellectually challenging yourself at all times. You should be pushing yourself physically. You should be pushing yourself mentally. Stay away from anyone anyone that that pushes you towards like short-term vices and whatnot. Stay away from your friends that are drinking. Stay away from friends that are smoking. Focus all of your time and energy on becoming as smart as you possibly can because all those vices, they just push you away from your connection to God. they block his grace from coming into your life. And his grace is what fuels your knowledge and your understanding and your wisdom. So that's kind of my my my thesis on what most people are missing nowadays. I know that was a ramble, but yeah. >> No, I think it's very I think it's very useful. I think people need to look at what they're doing and what they're investing their time into because a lot of this stuff is a muscle. I mean, you talk about IQ as a form of pattern recognition. This is the first time I've heard it expressed that way. But the more I think about intelligence and people problem solving, it is really just a muscle like going to the gym, you know, like you might be able to, you know, you might be able to improve your ability to see patterns if you just do more of that type of pattern. Like if I took a 100 IQ tests, I probably would improve my IQ just from taking the test because I would start to see those patterns, you know? So, is that really is intelligence really this like static thing where it's like it cannot change? It's like, well, I don't I don't think so. I I haven't seen that in my own personal experience. You know, I I always see that the more I spent time developing skills, the more I would see things I didn't see previously. You know, I would I would see dot I'd be able to connect dots I didn't previously connect. So, so, so here's a question then. Okay. So, a lot of people watching this are going to say, well, I I want to think more and like you said, the labor of the mind. Is that what you said? Is is that what is that how they they talk about >> labor? They don't want Yeah. they don't want to take on the labor. >> So, it's it's heavy, right? It's very heavy to sit and actually think. It does take a lot of emot like emotional energy, physical energy. You actually can get very tired. I mean, I've I like I like journaling, so like I have my notebook. It's full of scribbles. I like to use pen and paper to think about stuff, but it's it can get very exhausting. And I've had many times in my own life personally where it's almost an existential crisis when you think for so long about something because you have to like completely rethink the way that you're thinking about something. So >> that can sometimes take me away from implementing >> and you've been able to, you know, have that fine balance. I think from what I've seen from what you've been able to accomplish in business and marketing, it's like you can you can allocate enough time to developing your mind and to think critically, but not to the extent where you sit there like some of some some guys, they'll sit there and they'll just sit and think all the time and they won't actually take any action afterwards. What would you say to those guys that like they they they will love this conversation. They will watch this. They will be like, "Yeah, yeah." You know, and they're like boring. And yeah, and then they're going to go sit there and then they're not going to do anything to get any clients or they're going to just, you know, like they're going to overthink their way out of doing anything. >> What What would you say to those guys? >> I would say you're not thinking properly. >> I would say that if you're actually thinking about what are you what are you doing like is your goal to think or is your goal to get results? So, you know, if the goal is to get results, then we have to understand that it's like, this is why I love the gym as an example. You can go and watch all the videos. You can go and figure out the perfect workout split, the perfect nutrition, the perfect gut optimization routine, the perfect everything, but if you don't go pick up some heavy ass weight and put it back down and pick it up again, you're never going to grow. You're never going to get bigger. You're never going to excel in the gym. And so life is just a perfect onetoon metaphor for that, right? There's obviously like, you know, there's more nuance than that at the gym, but sure there's a there's a great uh bodybuilder, his name was Tom Platz. >> I love Tom Platz. He's just this he's like, I would rather die than not give it all to the gym. Like he's just he's a he's a a mountain of inspiration. He's just a phenomenal individual. And I and I love listening to him talk. And one of the things he said is that if you can do this, you can do anything. You can do anything. That's how he sounds. But I just I I love what he's saying though because it's so true. If you can push yourself physically to the point where I don't want to do this. I don't want to go to the gym and go do uh pendulum squats and go do leg extensions and leg strength curls. I I don't want to do this leg string curls. Uh laying leg curls is what I meant. Um you know, I don't want to do all this stuff, right? But you do it anyways. What are you training your body? You're training your mind and your body to do the things you need to do regardless of if you want to do it or not. I had a I had a great conversation with my spiritual father last night and um he was talking about how all the time he doesn't want to go to church. He's tired. He'd rather just stay at home, but he's like, "No one else." He's the priest. He's like, "No one else is going to run the service, so I have to." And he said, "It's a very immature like juvenile thing to have something you know you need to do and not do it because of how you feel in the moment." And it's very accurate. It's so accurate. So like, okay, you want to make money. Money is a byproduct of sales. Sales are a byproduct of conversations. Assuming that you're not selling a product, like if you're selling a service, right? Most of these guys are selling services. Just go have more conversations. If you just made your quota of that like that's the metric you're tracking how many conversations that I have today with other marketers with other business owners how many events that I go to whatnot you know you do that for six months straight and then you're just going to have more business than you know what to do with because everyone needs our services now assuming that you don't just like I do email copy and that's it right like that may take a little bit longer but if you can offer holistic services and understand how to really really offer a a a a useful service to someone dude it's it's so often I'll talk with with business owners ers and they they just their number one problem is we don't have enough customers. We don't have enough not enough people. If I could just get 10 times more people seeing my brand and they think it's this like magic orb when it's like nah dog direct response copyrighting like it's just it's just setting up direct response marketing the right way. So the more conversations you have the more sales conversations you'll enter into the better off be. That's how I made my career. I just had a lot of conversations with people. I just talked with a lot of people. I went to a lot of events, met a lot of people, and I'm set. Like, I'm good, dude. I could I could >> Is that how you got into the room with uh you know, the Alex Jones and Jordan Beilefford office? >> Every single person just conversations. I I was I was in a group, one person met me, they connected me with the person, they needed a copywriter, they were like, "Oh, this guy's like he loves everything about conspiracy theories. Like, he's great about this, you know, and then they connect me with this guy, they connect that guy, etc., etc., right? it. That's just how it works because you exist in a network and so information moves in a network-like manner. And so, you know, it's like you you have to kind of just do the basics, just talk to people, just have more conversations. There's a great guy that I I work with and I I I love him so much. His name is Dean Kazora. Um absolute unit of an individual. Like runs a bunch of sales teams, has taken 15 different teams to a million dollars per month. Is just a a phenomenal human being inside and out. That's good. That's very good. Yeah. He's just Yeah, he's just he's just he's one of my clients and he's just genuinely one of my favorite people in the world. I love talking to him. We were just talking about the other day that he's like one of the I'm in his circle and he's in my circle and like we just we we don't have a very wide circle. So, it's like having people that even though he's older than me by about like I think eight years or so, you know, we still get along really well. Um mainly because yeah, we just understand the core philosophy of it's just simple like you just have to talk to people. So yes, make time to think, but at the same time, like I said, you can't get big unless you pick up some damn weight. Like there's this very simple stuff. We talked about this at the beginning. What are the basics? Most people overoptimize for how do I get the right cold email system to be able to get, you know, the the the 2% increase and then be able to get the subject line automation and whatnot. And it's like, dog, I legit have landed clients, sending them an email with the subject line, I'm up at night thinking about you. And then I just wrote out an email be like, "I saw your ad. I was laying in bed and I thought it was great and I have some ideas on how I could boost your guys' CVR. Like, do do you want to go and have a conversation?" And most of the time they just see that they're like, "What?" And they open it and then they're like, "Oh, yeah. I mean, send me over what you're thinking." Right? So, if you just optimize for that, I'm going to enter into as many conversations as possible. And if you just make it really that dummy simple, you'll succeed. But where most people go wrong is they're like overanalyzing everything, right? they're worrying about their potential and whatnot. And great quote by M Mike Menser. He said that potential is only something that you can understand in hindsight. Meaning you never know how good you could have been unless you try. Like you you you can't understand what's going to happen. It only it's only understood in the rearview mirror. So my big thing is like yes, think yes learn how to develop philosophy. That's a that's a lifetime of education right there is understanding philosophy and studying the different philosophers over time. Like yes, go towards theology and metaphysics and understanding why things are the way they are and the way the world is structured and why why we believe what we believe and whatnot. But at the same time, like don't forget that you are not a copywriter, you are not an email marketer, you're not a paid ads person, you are a salesman who does that or saleswoman. That's what you do. So you have to do sales first and then all the other stuff happens afterwards. So it's like you don't get the client unless you do the sales. So, how can we get more referral partners? How can we get more clients? Like, it's just a day-to-day very simple thing. People think what I explain is like very complicated. I'm like, it's actually very simple. It's just that, you know, you you probably are observing it from a a too high level of a perspective. You have to kind of zoom in on what I'm saying. Very simple things. It's just do the work. Do the things you need to do. Great book on that is by um Steven Presfield. I think it's literally called Do the Work. Great book. kind of just talks about exactly what I'm talking about. Like there's this there's this sludge that you got to work yourself out of in the beginning when you've been lazy for a bit, but then after, you know, a couple weeks, you're now in the flow. You're not getting back into it and you're doing it and then you pulled yourself out and now you got clients and you're doing well. You're awesome. And then what's going to happen is down the road you're going to end up back in the sludge because you got lazy and then you're going to have to do it again. But once you've done it multiple times, you're like, I got this. It's not hard. >> So >> yeah, I've experienced >> that's kind of my philosophy. Yeah, >> I think I think you got to get into that momentum, you know, you got to be able to put in some work and as you put in more and more work, it gets easier because I mean the skill thing as well, like I I experienced this with um with YouTube, you know, when I first start on YouTube, I'm thinking like, okay, I could do this and this and you know, you know, um I could approach it this way. I could use this strategy. I could do this. I could split test thumbnails this way. I can do this. I could do that. And I'm thinking all these things and then you know my my my usual default decision is all right I'm just going to do some action and then I'm going to get some feedback and then I'm going to use thinking to optimize the feedback and take some things away from it. But I need to get some data. So let me just go and do it. So let's commit to a video per week. Then we move to two videos per week. And now it's like cool. Now we've got something pretty cool going on here. Um, what I wanted to say was that uh the reason that you do something versus just doing it, you know, you can have all kinds of reasons why you do something, but if it gets you a good outcome, um, you know, you don't have to fully understand all the intricate pieces until you start doing it. You might then start to develop better insights, you know. So, I think a lot of copywriters, they will I mean, this is why I'm a big believer in systems. I think that's quite cool that we've got got like a similar similar name for for on our offers because systems, you know, you can get into the the philosophical reasons for why you do what you do, but when you systemize something, it's like I put these things in, I put these inputs into this function, which is my system, and the outputs on the other side of this, and I've done it so many times that it's repeatable at this point. I can explain to you why that happens because I've got so much experience. I know. But at the same time, if you give this to a copyriter that's at 5K a month or 10K a month and you know you you you implement that system consistently and you get the results, then you can kind of look backwards in hindsight and be like, okay, what exactly was different about that, you know, but you just follow you just follow the system. And so that's why like with my coaching, what I decided to do with copyrighters back in 2020 is I decided I'm going to systemize all the stuff I do. then I'm going to explain why it's like that, but I'm going to create those systems and then you just follow the systems until you understand what you do. I mean, that's what we've all done really. I think I think people that have books and strategies, it's useful. You take the strategy, you take the book and then you try and build a system from it that you can implement and then you just go from there. But you have to put in the volume like you said with like, you know, conversations for example. I mean, yeah, it is really that simple a lot of the time. I think I think it's uh I think I think it comes down to some deeper stuff, man. You know, we can get into that, I'm sure. But um actually, you know what? This is a perfect um segue because I was going to ask you earlier why people are afraid of running ads. And I think the reason that some people are afraid of running ads, my suspicion is probably the same reason that people are afraid of going for big clients or anything that's kind of going to actually change their career. I have I have a suspicion it's pretty similar. So, I'm very curious. What do you What do you Why is it that most people don't want to run ads for their clients? >> They're lazy. Like I think that a lot of it comes down to the fact that they're like So like here's the thing. I'm I'm very blessed in that I have a very wide network of media buyers. And so I don't want to be inside of, you know, ads manager. I don't want to be inside of any anything with that. I just have media buyers. Um and so it's like, hey, what could you do? You could easily go find a media buyer, partner with them, and basically say, "Hey, I'll give you 20% of every client that I land if you run the ads for it." You don't have to do anything but manage the ads. You'll be shocked how many of them are like, "Yeah, sure." Right? They need to be a freelancer because if they're an agency, then they'll just, you know, they won't do that. But, you know, you could easily go do that. So, there's no skill issue there, right? Like I I don't I don't know how to set up the pix, but like, you know, like I don't want to set up the pixels and get everything tracked right now. and I probably wouldn't even do it the right way. So, the reason why though actually is because with copywriting, what is it? I write the thing and then I'm done. You're kind of like a mercenary. You just get hired and then you're done. Maybe you have some ongoing management like email and whatnot, but you're not really responsible for a lot of the business. Like, if you think about it, right, if marketing is down and you're just an email copywriter, they're not going to blame you for anything, right? They're going to blame the agency who's not doing the right job. I think a lot of it is. Yeah. Right. They're going to blame some some some some systematic issue that's that's going on. And so I think it's a lot of pressure for people to want to handle that. But, you know, it's like, okay, why is it that we get 10K a month plus 10% of new cash versus like an email copyriter will get like two to 5K per month and they're ceiling at that, right? Why is that? Maybe they can get a percentage of the emails, but even then they're they're, you know, they're siloed. like they're not going to have a ton of upside with it. Um, why is that? Well, it's because they just don't want to take on the full responsibility. Business is really just about being able to handle big problems. The people who handle the biggest problems, Uber, Airbnb, uh, YouTube, Facebook, right? These big, massive companies, they solve very big problems. They solve massive worldwide problems. Whereas, you know, obviously I'm not saying to go and like, you know, build an Uber, but if you want to be a marketer, what's the biggest problem you can solve? Nobody wants to do it. Nobody wants >> They don't want to work with the biggest clients. Yeah. They don't. They They say that they want to make more money, but they want to No, I mean, I've seen >> Well, because when you have a big client >> Yeah. When you have big clients, what happens is usually a big client understands marketing. >> So, you have to you have to say your stuff to you. >> Yeah. Uh, so you're going to say something like if you don't understand things. And this is where you have to humble yourself in the beginning. So it's really important to humble yourself to be like, okay, well, I don't really know a whole lot right now. I'm pretty good at writing copy. I have some good systems in place. I think you'd actually be better off just working underneath someone to really gain the experience so you could have some data for what you're talking about. Because when I come to a client and I'm like, "Yeah, I think you should just improve the VSSL. don't think you need to focus on these other things. And they're like, well, why do you believe that? I'm like, well, because of this company, this company, this company, this company, this company, all these different companies were in the exact same position you are. We just improved their VSSL. Their cost to acquire customer went down. They were able to increase their ad spend to double what it is now and get double the amount of customers at the same price. So, we should probably do that over, you know, you go build because then you start to realize as well that it's like every single thing you do is a new project. setting up a new set of email automations, setting up a new funnel, like these are varying degrees of of complexity that you have to take on, you know, do do you do you really want to handle all that? Um, when sometimes all you got to do is just flip this switch, do this differently, right? Change the messaging here, and then boom, the client's happy, and now you can open it up for, you know, bigger projects that you handle with them. So, I I think a lot of it stems from the fact that most people are just like they're they just don't want the responsibility. And you can see this across reality like look at the the the issue we have right now like our generation. How old are you Matthew? >> 26. >> Yeah. Same age. So it's like dude you know the the you're >> 26 as well. >> Yeah. Yeah. So it's like the is the issue that a lot of people have right now is like I can't find a wife. I can't find someone who wants to have kids. Like I I don't know what it is. I'm just struggling. What? And then inversely girls are like I can't find a husband. I can't find someone that wants to have kids. Right. Well what's the issue? It's responsibility. It's like, you know, think about it like this, dude. Having a kid in like the 30s was actually like totally feasible. At at at 20, you could have a kid and it easy. Like, you could afford it. Your wife wouldn't need to work. You have it handled. Now, dude, like if you don't have your financial situation set and you have a kid, it can almost be like debilitating to your career. Like, you could literally just be in the hole in debt from the medical bills, from everything. Like, dude, that's actually kind of crazy to think about. So yeah. Yeah. And so I think a lot of it is that people don't want the responsibility of that. But that's life, man. The the more responsibility you take on, there's like this like my spiritual father and I talk about this. There's this like inverse kind of like uh uh uh correlation. The higher your level of responsibility, the higher your level of fulfillment, but the lower the amount of fun that you have. the lower your level of responsibility, the lower level of fulfillment, but the more fun you're having. And so it's kind of just it revolves around, I think, that if people really looked at, okay, what is the biggest value that I could provide to a company, it's not just writing their emails. It's literally handling everything. But now, what happens when you create that thesis? Okay. Well, now I got to figure out how to do everything. Dude, I've dropped like 300 400K on my education and not not college, like coaching, consulting, masterminds, programs, courses, books, everything, right? And so I basically bought myself a master's in marketing and it's good marketing, too. It's not this garbage, you know, you know, intellectualized version of it from from, you know, a university. Um, and now I know how to do everything. So now because I've taken on the responsibility of educating myself and because I've taken the responsibility of taking on the clients and doing all that and doing this for six years now I'm at a point where oh it's actually like pretty pretty easy for me to come in and figure out what the issues are. And people see that and they're like oh man I wish I could do that. Right. And it's like >> that's your secret. >> Yeah. Yeah. What what do you do? Right. And it's like I I did this for six years and made a million mistakes in the process and figured out what worked and what didn't work. So, you know, it's just a byproduct of like if everyone will arrive at the conclusion that I'm talking about or they won't. If they won't, that's kind of a dumb statement, but you know what I mean. Like either they're going to arrive at the conclusion that I have, they're going to go start an agency or they're going to start some sort of um um they're going to start some sort of like growth partner thing that like what I'm doing or they're going to go and run their own offer or they're just going to stay a freelancer. And it's totally okay if you just want to have the freedom. But what will happen is, and I I've seen this with so many copywriters, they're making like 10, 15, maybe 20K a month. They're traveling. They're doing good. They're like, "Man, I've never had this much freedom before." But the thing that got them, there's this itch. There's this itch that like, I want to do more. I want I want to be more. Especially when you're a man, you have this desire. I want to conquer bigger things. I want to kill Goliath. I want to go and and do big things. You're not going to do it until you learn that it's like it's about taking on responsibility, which now means that people are dependent on you paying them. People are dependent on you running the company. People are dependent on you having the proper leadership. Your clients are dependent on you making the the things actually work and you have to do the things and you have to work on weekends and it's not as free and you can't just take eight hours off during the day. You have to get on calls. You have to answer messages. Like these things require you to make sacrifices. And so I I I just look at it as like if you want the fruits, okay, you have to plant the tree and you have to water the tree and you have to take care of the tree and make sure that something doesn't come and destroy the tree. And so most people just want the fruits and don't want to plant the tree. >> Yeah, you got it, man. I mean, that's that's that's what I've seen definitely from, you know, the coaching I've done with some copers. One copper told me he's so tired of clients, he wants to start his own offer. I said, "Oh, okay. So you want to have a thousand clients instead? like you know what are you escaping? You want to quit your 9 to5 or you want to quit the employee freelance job so that you can go freelance. So instead of having one boss now you have five bosses. You're not going to escape responsibility. You know like money comes from carrying a problem and and following through to the point where you've you know you've either resolved it or you've created a higher level problem or whatever it is. You're just going to have to keep carrying more and more weight. And the nice thing is I mean I tell people this. I say, "Look, I also like the gym analogy, by the way. It's kind of cool that we got very similar sort of um perspective on the stuff yet. I don't like I don't think we've come from the same the same like uh coaching and had the same coaches, but it's like very similar. I've reached similar conclusions. It's like with Jim, you know, if you go lift weight and you go lift heavy and heavier weight, the weight doesn't get lighter, you just get stronger, right? So, if you're carrying responsibility, you're going to get stronger from that. Which means that my experience, like my personal experience of life right now, it doesn't actually feel as hard if we were to use that word as back when I was broke because I'm a lot stronger today. I'm carrying a hundred times more in terms of leverage, in terms of what I'm what I'm like the eyes on me or whatever. I'm carrying a lot more, but I'm much stronger as a person. And so I find as a as a man, I do find that very fulfilling, you know, and I think that a lot of these guys, you know, you you got to just be okay with the fact that you don't know everything. you know, you don't know everything. In fact, you you know very little. You don't know what you don't know. And you know, the more you learn, the more you realize the less you know. You know, I think that's what I've I've found is like, you know, some things with business, they're like like a function almost. It's like that's not so much learning. Like I know that this if if this funnel is doing this, this is the problem. That that's not that that's gets quite obvious after a couple years. You kind of figure those basic, you know, the basic stuff out. But the the the real stuff you can spend your whole life, you know, studying like you said with like philosophy, you could keep going forever. So, you know, get past this basic stuff. That would be my my encouragement to a lot of you is like you're making good money. Get past the when I say basic, I don't mean fundamentals. I mean, like get past this, you know, like these just go and do get consistent like the basic stuff that's getting in your way of Yeah. Like just grow past it, man. Go past it. >> Yeah. Yeah. I mean the way I look at it is like you have to stop making the quotient in life am I having fun or not like that's how a child thinks am I going to have fun today or not that like if if you look at the majority of the world this is how they orientate themselves and so what I'm telling people is not for the masses it's for the individual who really wants to continue to crush it in life who wants to have an upward trajectory that by the time they're 40 they're set by the time they're 35 they're set by the time they're 30 they're set right and it's a byproduct of you understanding that fun. Well, again, it's it's you're going to have a lot of fun, but your fulfillment is going to be low, your responsibility is going to be low. And the era of um of doing 20 years of fun. Tim Dylan, the comedian, had a really good uh segment on this on this show like a couple weeks ago where he was like, "You're going to work on a boat." He's just like, "You know, you're you're making your life about partying and everything and it's so funny. You're going to work on a boat." And that's how it's he's he's right. If you make your life just about fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun fun by the time you're 35 by the time you're 40 like people are a lot less forgiving to the fact that you don't have experience. So if you're young and you're listening to this and you you have all the opportunity in the world to take risks take big massive risks. Go work for the big companies. Go take an employee job for you know a year or whatnot underneath a big company. Go do the things that other people won't do. Stop making it about am I having fun and am I living the way that people live on Instagram. That's just it's it's so low tier it to me when people say that like or they orientate themselves around that around like oh I want to live this like lifestyle that I see everyone posting and whatnot you know dude like what are you doing you're you're thinking in empiricism you have no principles and then you don't have really any your principle is I want to do what other people are doing so you kind of just default back over there. Well, we've seen other side of that like we've actually seen what those guys actually do behind the scenes because I know majority of those business coaching guys that are like living that lifestyle, every single one of those purchases is is a marketing purchase. >> Oh yeah. I mean, and think about >> they're not even doing it for the fun anyway. So >> yeah. No, I mean I mean think about what I was saying earlier too is like from that empiricism perspective like you want to dismantle it. Do you know what's on the back end of that? Oh, you know, he's just buying cars and he's just doing dinners. I've met these guys. They're they're spiritually vapid. There's nothing there. They'll like listen to me and I don't understand what he's saying. Versus, you know, I meet someone who's really like a highle individual and they can go back and forth with me and there's respect there and they view me as a peer. Whereas they view these other guys as like, yeah, he's fun. He's a good boy, right? But they view it that way. And so at a certain point, what happens as a man is that you want respect. Well, you don't get respect being the fun guy. You don't. You get respect by being the person who's competent and handles problems. And I'm not trying to act like I'm, you know, whatever. Like I'm Andrew Tate or like I'm this super high level, super, you know, I I I carry the burden on on my uh the burden of the world on my shoulders or whatnot, you know. No, but this is the philosophy that I live my life by is that and and when I stray from it, I feel awful. I'm like, ah, this sucks. I need to go back to what I'm doing, right? And then you just get back on it. And that's life. I don't think that anyone is static and that just grow grow grow. What happens is you grow, grow, grow, you fall. And and I believe that God allows you to fall. So you humble yourself and realize that you can't do it by yourself. You have to have a higher a higher power that is pushing you towards what you're doing. So then you reevaluate, get back on track, grow, grow, grow, grow, grow, and then you fall a bit, re-evaluate, come back to center, grow, grow, grow, grow, grow, grow. And then again, like I said, hindsight, you're looking in the mirror at the end of five, 10 years of doing that, and you're like, "Man, look at how far I've come." And you know what's the crazy part is all the progress is going to come in the last three years. >> Yeah. >> That's what most people don't want to understand is that like you know the the first three years of my career were a grind. They were such a grind. Now we're at the next three years or at six years now and I'm like man it's been a lot easier, right? But I'm sure when I'm going to go like three years from now, man, this crazy man, it's going to keep going and going and going and going. It's a byproduct of just doing the right thing for a long period of time and not focusing on appearances. Like I used to really care what everyone thought about me and I wanted to be the big guy and I wanted to pull up in the Porsche and I wanted to do all this stuff and then I bought all this stuff and I was living this lifestyle and I was like this sucks. This is so lame. This is so low tier. This is so low IQ. And you just realize you don't care what other people think about you. You don't care. You just you just wanted to like fulfill something that happened in high school where you didn't feel like you were cool or not. you weren't in the cool kids group or you didn't really have the attention that you wanted from your parents or whatnot. And so you're just trying to patch these emotional wounds based on, you know, how other people see you. And then eventually what you realize is nobody cares. >> Nobody cares at all. And so it's like, okay, what are you living in your life? >> They don't care. They really don't care. And so and so it's just like, okay, like yes, there's some status symbols. And I'm not saying to not buy stuff. I'm not saying not have fun ever and not go do stuff or just be a hermit at home. But what I am saying is that an unprincipled man and even an unprincipled woman like is going to end up at the point in their life where they're like they're having these I need to go do laska 17 times in the jungle, right? Because they don't understand their life and whatnot. And I'm not I'm not trying to poo poo those people, but it's like the truth is is that if you did not just handle your stuff, you're going to run into an existential crisis. And it really was just a byproduct of you were being lazy for years, but you create all this just like just mess in your mind of like why it is. is and it's because of my this and that and that and it's like dude it's just you are being a lazy [__] and now you're you're realizing it and that cognitive dissonance you're experiencing of I wanted to be successful but I I'm not doing the thing and that disconnect there. So I I I'm just a really big proponent of of living a principled life and if you want to discover the right principles to live your life by I would say just go back to the OG principles go back to the Bible. Go back to the philosophers. Go back to people who are more intelligent and wise than you and study them. Don't study Instagram influencers. Don't study coaches and consultants. >> Why do you even have to It's crazy. It's crazy. You have to >> magicians. Yeah. Yeah. >> Yeah. >> Yeah. >> I I resonate I resonate a lot with this. And I think that uh >> at the end of the day, this whole mindset thing everybody likes to they love the word mindset. Now, I'm not sure what your perspective is on mindset, but what I've what I've found with mindset is it's a lot of the time explaining explaining away, excusing away, just taking action. Like I don't particularly, for example, need to go um have the perfect mindset to show up at the gym every day because I have a personal trainer. So, the mindset catches up with me a lot of the time because I've done the action I need to do. I follow the system. I follow the process. >> Then that stuff kind of catches up. Then you suddenly have some self-confidence. So, like for example, if you've never run ad campaigns, you know what you could do is you could go after a client, you could close the deal, you could take 50% of that and you could pay a copywriter that's done ad deals and then just learn it on the job. And then your self-confidence will go back up because you now have that skill instead of instead of uh thinking like, oh, you know, I've got all kinds of messed up stuff in my head that's like stopping me from closing this deal. Let me go and existentially figure out the reason I'm I am what I am. Like, bro, just go close a deal. Like, just go and offer the deal and go go aggressive. What do you think? >> I would I would I would bet money that most of the clouded judgment that these people have is a byproduct of vices. Like the saints say this that the the vices cloud your judgment. And so, a lot of the issues that they have is a byproduct of drinking, smoking, pornography, sex, etc. And if you were to just like get yourself sober and in a good state and just in a good routine for like a week or two and just maintain that, you'd be like, "Wow, what was I thinking?" Like a really good exercise is whenever you're in this like negative state, just go and record yourself on your phone. Like just get the recording going and just just run that and record your thoughts and record what you're thinking and what you're speaking. And then do what I just said. Get sober. Get clean. Stop doing stupid [__] Stop going out. Stop eating like crap. Eat clean. Eat healthy. Be in a good routine. Don't focus on your vices. Do that for two weeks. And then what's going to happen on the byproduct of that is you're going to go listen to that voice note and you're like, "Wow, I was being a wussy. Oh my goodness." Like I Wow. >> Yeah. >> Yeah. And because you realize that your your mindset is a complete byproduct of the inputs that you're putting into your life. And so when you set it up in a way where you're not doing those things and look guys, I'm not perfect, right? I've I've I've I'm I'm the prodigal son embodied in in real life. I've strayed a thousand times, but I keep coming back because the issue is that or the the the the principle to live yourself by is that you're never too far gone. So it's like if you really have been messed up the past few years, and I I think that this is just the reality that I don't see a lot of people talking about in business is they're like you got you got to want it more than you want to succeed. Yeah, but if your chemistry is just completely messed up and your testosterone is at like a level 100, and I mean like 100, not like 100 out of 100, I mean like 100 nanogs per deciliter, and then like you know, you don't you're not eating proper and you're drinking and you're smoking and you know, you're busting a nut every day, four times a day. Like, man, what's going to happen is that your body is just flooded with all the wrong chemicals. All the wrong chemicals. These are the chemicals that say do nothing. But when as a man you realize that like your chemistry really affects what your mindset is, you Oh, I'm in a bad mindset. Okay. Well, what have I done? All right. I had Chick-fil-A the last three days. Okay. Yeah. Maybe it was a little bit I was going out a bit too much. Okay. Yeah. >> It sounds very simple when you put it this way, man. You know, >> it is simple, but that's the thing is everyone wants to make it complex because if it's complex, then I don't need to I don't need to handle it. I have to think about it. >> Gives me permission to be lazy again. >> Yeah. If I'm not saying when I say to think about it to like to to put it off, to think about it and to actually have good thoughts and to to embody those thoughts is to understand that like yes, you live a life of virtue and then oh what a surprise. Everything is clear and easy and good to understand. Like dude, I was a functioning addict for years and it it was just like a matter of of realizing, man, this is holding me back quite a bit and I'm not going to be sober for the rest of my life. I'm going to be sober just for today. And then the next day, I'm going to be sober just for today and just for today. And you do that enough and then it's like, wow, I've been sober for like 140 days. I haven't had anything to do. Like, I haven't had any urges. Why is that? Well, it's because you just focus on one day at a time. I'm going to be perfect today. And you do that over and over again. You build these wins and you stack this momentum. It's just so easy to go and crush it, guys. like like when you realize people will watch these you know interviews like you know what you're doing and and just in general with other people and they'll see these bigname figures and like oh I could never be like them or whatnot man I meet these guys I know these guys these guys are not people you want to embody in general like and I'm not saying the people you've interviewed I don't really know your interview list but I'm just saying in general these big figure names and marketing a lot of them are you don't resonate with right they have no principles they have no ethics they have no morals right and it's like you know Yeah, sure they know how to make money. But it's like your life should not be a byproduct of money. Something my spiritual father told me that I just I love this because it's so true. Man's purpose is to connect to God. There's no other purpose. Your purpose is not to be a a maximizer of shareholder value. Your purpose is not to to uh um um you know just just make money and that's it and to get cars and to get a hot girl or whatnot. Your purpose is for you to connect to God. If you actually connect to God truly, you would understand that man, this love that he has for me, that's just it's it's it's unconditional that it's just absolute love. Why don't I have that for myself? Why am I hurting myself? Why am I harming myself? Why am I doing things I shouldn't be doing? And if you just really tap into that thought stream and then go down the rabbit hole and you end up on the other side of that, man, like what ends up happening is you see a vision for who you could be and a life vision of where you could be. And that should be much more persuasive to get you on track than if I get on track, I'll make 10K a month. Yeah. And then what's going to happen? You're going to make 10K a month and you're going to go blow out of Vegas or go do some stupid crap, right? So, you know, I I have it even with clients where like doing well, crushing it, have everything going for them, and then what are they doing on the weekends? They're partying, they're drinking, they're going out to clubs and whatnot. You talk to these people and there's like a flatness in their eyes. It's like it's like they're they're not there fully versus when you talk to someone who's like, you know, when you meet someone and they're just they're there, they're vibrant, their energy is explosive, like you just you're oh my goodness, like you could just talk to them for hours and hours and hours, right? What is that? It's that they have a soul that is open that's there and that is present. Grace is filling through them. Like you can you can connect with this individual, right? But it, you know, you don't get that on the byproduct of you doing a bunch of vices on a day-by-day basis. So, you know, everyone wants to go like, what's the greatest hack to, you know, do this? There's a great great great quote from Sam Ovens back in the day. He's like, have you ever tried just like being sober? He's just like he's like, you know, like everyone wants to focus on how to optimize their funnels. What about just like being sober and I I remember hearing that and being like, "Oh, yeah, that makes sense. Didn't do anything about it. Was not sober for a while." And now I see the genius in what he said. It's so true. You'll run laps around people if you're just sober for a decade. I I I fullheartedly believe that if you have amazing habits and you just consistently do the thing in a decade, you will be the industry leader. But it doesn't happen overnight and it takes time and it takes a lot of restraint. And that's why I emphasize learning how to think because if you can learn how to think, you can navigate the crap that's going on up here. I know we're a little bit over. I know we have >> No, no, no. This is good. This is really good. I think a lot of people need to hear this. I think >> a lot of the a lot of the the marketplace I think copywriters are particularly um because there's a lot of creative energy. Many copywriters are creatives that that like >> resistance to routine does come naturally to many of them. is like, "Oh, I don't want to," you know, and or and then, you know, I think that that can be very common for them to, >> you know, want to get um yeah, like have a vice and it can get distracting or maybe even the vice is something simple as just it's just uh I mean, I'm sure we can get into it. We can get into it. I mean, we'd love to chat about it at some point, but if somebody wants to learn more and see what you're up to and, you know, follow what you're up to and what you're working with copy and systems, where can they where can they find you? Yeah, Facebook's probably the best spot. Um, I post most on there. You know, I have accounts on X, like I think pretty much everywhere. It's either Nicholas Verge or Nick Verge. Um, I have YouTube. I'm just not really active on YouTube and X anymore. I primarily focus on Facebook. Um, so I just go there. I post pretty consistently on there. Yeah, copy systems.com. You can go and check out what we do if you're like an agency owner or, you know, if you're a business owner that wants to work with us, you know, you can go and do that. Um, but as a whole, Facebook's primarily the main place. I don't really do the newsletter right now as much as I was previously. Just not as high of leverage as just Facebook. That's kind of crazy. But like in general, there's that. We'll be launching some products later in the year. Um, as of right now really, we're only off for like either consulting or partnership. So, I mean, that's pretty much it. I just say Facebook's the best spot. >> Cool. I'll make sure to drop the link in the description. Nick, it was really great chatting with you today. Thanks so much, man. This was awesome. >> Yeah, man. All the best.
