

3. Liking-Relatability

Welcome to the third module in the copywriting 101 course. Now in this module we have something extremely extremely important to cover. talking about how to create trust in your audience because without trust selling becomes extremely hard if not impossible. Meaning the following concepts are extremely important if you want to sell anything online. Now quick disclaimer. I highly recommend watching every previous module before this one because as always we'll be building on the concepts we've already talked about there. And if you don't understand those in depth well applying these will be hard and complicated. So with that out the way, let us dive straight in. The bridge of trust. There's an old Horoszi quote that I love. I don't know where he got it from. Maybe he made it up. But it's that sales is a transference of belief over a bridge of trust. So as you can see in this little diagram, we have you and your audience. And in order to transfer the belief they need to buy your stuff and change their life, they have to trust you. So, if people don't like and trust you, it doesn't matter how good your copy and sales messages, they're not going to buy. And if some of you are having trouble getting clients and selling products online or selling for your clients, it's probably because of this. It doesn't matter how good your copy is, your sales messages, your belief shifting is. If people don't trust you, they don't trust you. Meaning, they're not going to buy from you. They're not going to believe a word that you say. So, a simple example is imagine a friend that you love and trust deeply. This person has never lied to you. They've never led you astray and they call you and they say, "Yo, I got this thing you have to buy. It is amazing. I know it'll change your life because it changed mine. Dude, you got to get this thing like now." On the flip side, let's imagine you have some sleazy guy from high school that you remember. He was kind of a douche and always was trying to like get one over on people. always only looking out for himself. He's lied to you before and he comes to you and gives you this elaborate sales pitch about the same product. He has all the witty responses to your objections and he sells this thing like crazy. And from a sales point of view, he's crushed it. But there's still a low chance you buy from him. Why? Because you don't like him. You don't trust him. It doesn't matter what he says. And so oftent times us copywriters and marketers get so tied up in the funnels and the selling tactics that we forget the most obvious question which is do they even like and trust us? It seems so obvious but man we forget it because we get tied up in all the fancy stuff and forget the basics. And so in the future modules, we're going to dive deep into crafting compelling sales messages and how to chain beliefs and proof together to make your product and service irresistible emotionally and logically. But none of that matters if your audience doesn't like and trust you. Hence why this module comes first. Now before we get into this, I want to give just a quick warning. These principles are extremely powerful and should not be taken lightly. And I don't say that as some kind of sales method here. You've already bought this thing, right? So, I'm not selling you any further. I'm simply saying be careful. This stuff is extremely powerful. And these are the exact principles that have led to starting the world's largest brands. But these very same principles have created cults which led to the death of their followers. So before continuing, I don't mean to be scary or anything. I'm just saying please promise me that you'll devote your new power to good and not evil. Sell products and concepts, frameworks, services that bring good to the world, not evil. So use these to serve the market, not yourself. So with that out of the way, you're probably like, "What the freak is this going to contain?" It's going to be good. Trust me. Let's go over the 11 variables of likeness. The liking principle states that we are more likely to be influenced by people we feel a connection with or we like. Translation, we're more likely to trust people we like. And so if you look at this bridge of trust, each brick is made up of liking. So you trust someone because you like them. And we're going to go over the 11 variables of what creates that likeness. And so if you understand how to use each variable and you use them, you will create this bridge of trust like crazy. It'll be solid. It'll be firm. It'll be easy for people to trust you and for you to transfer beliefs. That's the whole point of this entire module. So in Robert Kadini's book, Influence, he describes how people prefer to say yes to those that they like. And multiple studies have not only shown this to be true, but to be one of, if not the most important variables when it comes to someone making a purchasing decision. So when it comes to someone deciding whether to buy or not to buy, whether they like you or not is one of the most important variables. And after studying countless books and almost doing a million in sales online, I can tell you he's freaking right. Liking is everything. There's been so many times where my funnel has sucked and my copy had sucked and I didn't know what I was doing, but because people liked me, they bought. Think about you. Maybe you bought Copy Elite back when I had the the like I've been through so many variations of terrible VSSLs and terrible funnels. And the entire time people still bought. I was still doing over, you know, 50K a month, 40k a month, no matter what. Why? because I just think people liked me. Liking is everything. And that's why I want to share with you the 11 variables of likeness because when you focus on leveraging these variables, you'll find that your audience will begin to fall in love with you or your client. So, here's our little diagram here. And what I want to do is we're going to go over each principle one by one. And then I'll show you some examples and practical applications for each. And then later on the module, I'll show you how all of these tie into real funnels for real brands, real personal brands to see how the best of the best are using these to sell products. I hope you're ready. Let's get right into it. So, like I said, each one of these principles is like a brick in your bridge of trust. So, the more you use these, the more trust you have, the more you can sell to your audience. So, number one, relatability, similarity. We like people that we relate to. People who share the same feelings, the same internal emotions as we do. We like to buy from people and brands that get us, that understand what we're going through. They understand how I feel. They understand how I'm feeling. They understand they're they know me. Also, we like people we are similar to. Those who have the same traits externally as we do. people who look like us, who think like us, who are in the same situations as we are. Meaning they share the same background. So people around the same age, people from your same hometown or country, people from the same culture, the same interest, they like the same sports, the music, hobbies, same values and opinions or appearance, social status. So relatability is more on the emotional side of things. So you cannot you can look super unsimilar to someone but still relate to them. That's how it differs. Relatability is more internally. Similarity is kind of more external factors. But these tie together to make this one important statement, which is the more your audience believes you feel how they feel, like the things they like, and look and talk the way they look and talk, the more they'll like and trust you. And so, a great example is memes. The reason why memes do so well is because they're extremely relatable. Whenever you see a meme that goes viral, it goes viral because so many people have felt or they know that same vibe the meme is giving off. That's what makes it so funny. And that's why like memes go a lot more viral than just a couple a bunch of words because the picture can convey so much more relatability and emotion and that sparks that liking and people share the meme and it goes crazy. Another example is when you talk about someone's specific conditions, they feel understood and similar to you and your brand. This is why this one is number one, by the way, because if you've gone through specific conditions, you understand that wow, if you can use their language and use their pain points, use their desires, talk about situations they've been in, it creates that relatability, similarity, which creates trust. So using similar language, talking about similar interest, similar hatreds and enemies, similar clothes, similar accent, etc. What's funny is I was in Africa a couple years ago and I was in like West Africa where no not many people go in Sierra Leon and it was so funny because this is gonna sound terrible. I never I was never so happy to see a white person in my life when I ran into this random white person because there's nothing but just African people and they're everywhere which is dope but I am not similar to them. I don't speak their language. Their even when they speak English their accent was so strong I could barely even understand it. Like you just want to kind of be around someone who gets where you're from. And so we ran into this one white dude, literally one person out of thousands that we talked to, this one white guy. And we were like, "Yo, you're from America." He's like, "Yeah, bro." And I never felt this strong connection to some random dude in my life. Just because I was around so many things and people that I was unfamiliar with. As soon as I saw someone I was familiar with, it was like, "Dude, you speak English. That's awesome. Let's talk about English stuff." So, yeah, that's what it feels like when you are the only brand that's talking and and looking the way that your audience looks and talk. So pretty cool. Another example is, you know, I use bro a

3. Liking-Relatability

lot. Brother, dude, all these are language that you guys probably use. And any females watching this, I'm sorry. I'm not a female. So, it's hard for me to kind of relate to y'all, but or it's hard for me to be similar to y'all, but I can relate to y'all by saying that we all come from the same feeling of wanting to be above average, wanting to set out on our own and build our own business. That's me relating to you no matter what you look or sound like or what gender you are. Pretty cool. Uh you also can see me doing this talking about interest. So I talk about video games. Why? Because you guys love video games. Therefore I talk about it which makes you relatable to me. And I don't do that out of some evil intention. I genuinely freaking love video games and I've been addicted to them for a long time and am a recovering addict. So when I talk about that, that's true of me. It relates to you guys and you guys are like, "Yeah, freaky yeah. We love video games." You get the point. All right, moving on to familiarity. Consistency. So, we like things that we're familiar with. Familiarity feels safe. Our brains are wired to prefer what we recognize, being faces, names, accents, style, because based on past experiences, it's less likely to be a threat and more likely to be rewarding. This is known as the mere exposure effect in psychology. So the more that we're exposed to something, the more we tend to like it just because it's familiar. So as you'll notice in a lot of these, they sound very similar, but there's little nuances that are different. So the difference between familiarity and these two above is familiarity is just how many times you've seen something. It feels safe. And just like the Africa example, when I was in Africa, it it was so weird because they have the same things, but they're not made out of the same materials. So they have cars, but they don't look like American cars. They have houses, but they don't they don't look like American houses. They're made out of like cinder blocks and cement. It just looks so unfamiliar. And you don't realize it until you're somewhere out of your comfort zone that's unfamiliar. You don't realize how familiar you are with the world around you that you live in on a daily basis. And uh what's cool about this is consistency creates predictable familiarity. So when someone sees you show up in the same way, same appearance, same energy, same values, they begin to feel like they know you and can trust you, even if they don't really know you that well or at all. So remember from last module, predictability feels safe and people trust what they can predict. And so when you are consistent, you feel safer than someone or some brand that is inconsistent. So these are a little bit complicated, but the examples make better sense of it. So first thing is your family. There's a funny Sam Ovens quote where he talks about how the only reason you like your family is because of impressions. Impressions. That's why you love your family because you've seen them more than you've seen anyone else. So you're more familiar with them, meaning you like them. This is a classic classic rule of advertising. If you've ever wondered when you see some ads and they are terrible, you're like, "How are they still running this ad? It's not good at all." Especially on TV and commercials, you got to realize

it's because it's creating familiarity. Even if the ad was like terrible, if they put it in front of you enough times, you begin to trust this brand more than another brand who hasn't been put in front of you. And this works really well for stuff that people aren't like going and seeking out. For example, I don't know if you guys you guys not from America might not get this, but there's a Cheezits commercial. I'm going to show it to y'all real quick. It's hilarious. Cheezits. Who's the cheesiest? So, this Cheezits commercial has ran for I kid you not. I think it's may it might be older than four years. I feel like I've seen this commercial a bajillion times, but they run the same commercial every year again and again and again. And it's because they're creating familiarity. And so you might not want a cheese cracker at that moment. But when you go to the grocery store and you decide you want a cheese cracker, even if the advertisement sucks, you don't know the other brands. The only brand that you've seen is Chee It. So what do you choose? Cheeit. All because it's familiar to you. you've seen it before. This is also why I do daily uploads. So, part of one of the principles for my new daily channel that I'm testing is if I can create that familiarity with me, people will trust me more. They'll show up to my videos, they'll buy my stuff, and I'll be able to help them. And so, by uploading daily, I'm getting seven times the familiarity. And by not missing an upload, it creates this consistency. And so when someone goes to invest in my stuff or someone else's stuff, they look at me and think, "Wow, KJ's here for me every single day. He's consistent." And subconsciously they think, "Wow, okay, that's safe." That creates that feeling of safety. And so they end up going with me over the person who uploads every three months because they're like, "Well, what if they just stop? What if they stop helping? What if they don't work with the same niche anymore?" Yeah. So pretty cool. That ties into a very important concept, which is the same niche, same offer, same product. So, if you guys have been following me for a while, you'll understand that I've changed my funnel. I've changed the style of my videos. I've changed probably every freaking thing you can change. I've even changed my voice. I'm in the process of trying to change it. So, I changed everything. But when it comes to the things that really matter, I have not touched. Meaning I still help the same exact people as the very day I started. I still have the same offer as the very day I started. I still have the same product as the very day I started. Copy Elite has not changed at all. Meaning the product like I still sell Copy Elite. I haven't swapped to a brand new niche. I haven't swapped to some different offer. I haven't swapped to building a whole new product around speaking or a you know fitness product. I'm doing the same thing. And because I've done that for a year, those of you that have been following me for a year, you feel safer than someone who just popped on the scene, even if they're better than me, you're like, "Well, this KJ guy, he's been around for a long time. I know he's not going to swap up. I know he's not going to switch up and go just try to chase the bag because he's been here." So, yeah, familiarity, consistency. Also, this is why we tend to hang out with people from the same race as us. And this doesn't just mean skin color. It means like the culture because we feel familiar with those people. Same example of me being in Africa. When I saw a person speaking English, I was like, "Yo, talk English with me." Because we're familiar with it. A good example because I'm a redneck is Ford versus Chevy trucks. So, if you're not from the country or from America, there's a big debate in the South on whether Ford is better or Chevy is better. And if you grew up in a Ford family, you think that Ford is the superior truck because you're familiar with it. Your granddad drove a Ford, your dad drove a Ford, they bought you a Ford, and because you're familiar with Ford, you just think that it's better. Same is true for Chevy. If you grew up in a Chevy family, your whole family had Chevys. They talked about how good Chevy was. You rode in it since you were little. You drove it when you turned 16. you like Chevys because you're familiar and you'll make up all these reasons why you actually like it more, but to be honest, you know, it's because you were just raised in it. That's that's why you're familiar with it. Another good example is Odblock. So, there's this streamer um if you guys don't know, I play or I used to play a lot of Runescape. Let's see. Odblock. And there's this guy called Odblock. And I've been following him for a long time. And I'm not a huge fan of this guy or I wasn't. He uploads these videos every single day. And what's funny is because he uploads every day very very consistency and he consistently and he has for a long long time. Like I've not been a fan of this guy. I didn't like him when he first came on the scene. I watched a ton of other YouTubers. But here's the difference between him and the other ones. He has been dogheaded consistent since the very start. The dude just continues to put out content. And so what would happen is when I would want to watch a Runescape video, there wouldn't be any out there except for Odblocks. And so I was forced to just watch his video. And so when I watched it enough times, I actually began to like him. He didn't really change that much. It's just that I became more familiar with him. I understood the way that he did things and why he did things. And now, I kid you not, I watch his videos every freaking day. And the same, what's funny is the same is true as one of my best friends. He hated Odblock. And now he'll send me his videos just because I legit this guy is just consistent. And the more familiar we got with him, the more we end up liking his stuff and now we watch him every day. So really cool. Number three, authenticity, humanity. So we like people who feel authentic, people who seem real. This is why AI has got a long way to go. Um, and I saw a cool music video. Let me show you guys this. Uh, what is this guy name? Flume. So, Flume put out a music video the other day. And it's crazy. It's a wild looking video. Like, you can watch it on your own, but it it just looks so weird. Like, very weird. Uh, the song is incredible, but extreme, really weird animation. And a lot of the comments were talking about how the creativity is insane and there's no way that AI would just make something like this. Um, because it's authentic. It's just weird. And so, we like things that feel real, that feel human, authentic. And so, what they'll say is, "Oh, they're being themselves. It doesn't feel like they're pretending. I can trust what they're showing me. And part of that is we like people who feel human, meaning perfectly imperfect. So since we know that deep down that no one's perfect, no one's lived a perfect life except Jesus. Jesus is the only one who lived a sinless life just so he could die for our sins if we believe in him. We have relationship with God again. But because we're not Jesus and no one else has ever been Jesus, we distrust people who come across as perfect because deep down we know it's a lie. We feel like they're lying to us because we know that there's no human that's perfect. So when someone does show us their humanity, it builds trust because we realize they're imperfect just like us. So when someone seems perfect, they appear to be dishonest. When someone seems imperfect, just enough of imperfection, they seem honest. We want to trust them. They mess up. They get nervous. They overthink. They failed before. Hey, they're just like me. So, the more that your audience believes you're being real and not performing, the more they see your human imperfections, the more they like and trust you. And so, an example could be talking about your past failures. And bonus points if it's relatable and similar to your audience's failures. using your real voice, not corporate speak or perfect grammar. So you see in my sales messages I'll say bro and don't worry RN meaning right now and yeah just talking like not corporate if I was to what's funny is I use chat GPT to help me structure some of these modules once I have all the essence of it written myself but every time I have to go back through and reword it because it sounds too corporate. Even when I tell it to use my voice, it still can't do it because it's just too it's too corporate speak and people like mistakes. Laughing at yourself, showing mistakes in real time. These are great ways to show humanity. Showing and saying that you don't know everything. It's a great way. And a good example that I used to do in the past and I still do. So, one of the examples of let's see in my daily videos I am literally just trying to be as authentic and human as possible. I made a recent video talking about how entrepreneurship sucks and it's just a video talking about the hardships of entrepreneurship. Also in my other channel, I used to do these a lot and I still do. You see me talking about these achievements in my life, a message to my future self, why I follow Jesus, how it feels to hit 10K a month. Like, look at how authentic and real that is and seems. So, pretty cool. My three-year battle with anxiety. Some of you might have seen that and thought, "Wow, this dude's kind of different from other YouTubers." Why? Because I'm just showing my failures live. It's cool. So, a really, really big warning here. Authentic does not mean oversharing. It does not mean showing everyone everything because there's aura and there's attractiveness in mystery. So, being authentic simply means choosing to share certain moments and not sharing everything. It's a delicate balance. What I like to say is don't record yourself pooing. That's kind of the concrete phrase that you can help yourself remember this by is there's

there's a fine balance between showing your humanity and then just oversharing to the point where people are like, "I don't know if I love this guy. This guy's a bit overboard." Or sharing so many flaws that people start to doubt your skill. Um, just remember there's there's aura and mystery. Don't show everything, but also don't be a robot. Show some failures. Show your humanity. Show your the human side of you. And a good example about this is CEQ1. So I had the opportunity to have a couple guys on my team fly out and live with me for a few months. They literally lived right above me and some of them lived in my house and that was too much. It was definitely oversharing. And so they got to see every single part of my life and I got to see theirs. And we're just human. So yeah, you just don't want to overshare. It's like they start to realize that, oh man, maybe this dude's nuts. Maybe he's not the crazy leader I thought. Maybe he's just insane. And I was thinking, man, I can't work with these people because freick me, there's just living with them 24/7 is a lot different than than working with them. Uh so yeah. important lesson, but it's all about it's the same goes for for anything, relationships, with family. Anytime you spend every waking second with anyone, you just need some some alone time. The same goes for your brand. Like don't show everything. Uh but show some humanity. So these principles lead to a feeling of safety and trust. And so when people see you as human and authentic and honest, they feel safer around you, leading to likeness and trust, which is what we're trying to achieve. Bring us to number four, happiness and warmth. Obviously, we prefer to be happy over sad. Therefore, we like people who make us feel happy. People who smile, who give off light, who feel light. Those people are often described as warm. Warm people make us feel happy, safe, and accepted for who we are. So, I want you to think about your friends that you they're they're easy to be around. You'd prefer being with them most of the time over not being with them versus the friends that you you love them, but you can't spend more than an hour with them because they'll drive you insane. The ones who are always negative, who are always complaining, they always have something negative to say. They're kind of cold. They're not funny. They're stressed out all the time. and they feel like they have a,000 lb weight on their back at all times. You subconsciously just don't want to be around those people because it's just stressful. It's not warm. So, people like people who seem to be enjoying life. People who laugh easily. They don't take everything too seriously. They show gratitude, excitement, and joy. Happiness is contagious, which is why we prefer to be around them. The more your audience sees you as warm, non-judgmental, and genuinely happy, the more they'll like and trust you. And so, there's a lot of examples here. A great example you guys can look up is uh go watch some interviews with Jack Harlo. This dude has clearly studied the game and he is just extremely warm and charismatic. So, don't watch his music music and stuff. Just go look at his interviews. A good one is um there's one he did where they're eating the wings. What is that? Hot ones. Go watch his Hot Ones interview. It's really really cool. But he's a really good example of someone who just is seems so stress-free and warm and just hilarious to be around. And the happier you make your audience, the more they're going to like you. Simple as that. So a good example is think about golden retriever. thinking about a really cute dog or a puppy. They can't talk. They can't really provide any like problem-solving value. They just sit there and smile. And guess what? You take care of them. You feed them. You clean their crap up off the floor. You'll do anything for them. And you like them. Even when even when they're put in front of random people, the random people are like, "Look at that good boy." Golden Retrievers smiling. If I recorded this whole module like this and I told you guys, people usually forget what you said, but they remember how you make them feel. Warmth is you leaving them feeling better. It just doesn't feel right because I'm not smiling. I don't seem happy. I seem stressed out and too heavy. Uh so smile is everything. So learn how to talk with a smile. And when you're writing copy, write it positively. It just seem light-hearted and fun. And obviously there's going to be copy that's more serious than others, but ultimately you just want to have this warm tone to your copy and to your marketing as a whole. Also, voice. Voice is huge. The speed of your voice, the volume of your voice, the rhythm, the accent, the confidence, etc. Voice is I I would say probably one of the biggest variables when it comes to warmth and happiness is how does someone sound? because you can tell a lot by how someone sounds. And if they're pissed off and they're loud and they're just angry, they're not smiling, you don't feel warm. On the flip side, if they're just insecure and they're not confident, they speak really quietly, you just feel weird around them. And so, anytime you're doing something where it's like a video, voice is freaking crazy important. I'm studying this like crazy right now. Next is calmness. Being calm. Um, I think of like the Joker. They're like, "Why so serious?" You see these people sometimes, especially in the business game, and they're just like, it's like life or death. It's like, bro, calm down. You're selling an online course. Just chill. Take a deep breath. It's not the end of the world. And so, don't get caught up in this like phase where you're just so freaking serious in the weight of the world. If you don't pop off, if you don't get an outreach back, you're gonna just go nuts. Nah, bro. Just let it go. It's not that big a deal. You're going to learn from it. It's all good. Why so serious? Body language is huge. Um resting bace. I suffer from this pretty hard. If you see me out in the street, I'm like, but if you talk to me, I'm not like that. So, I'm working on having a much more natural face where I'm just chilling, happy to be here. A great example is Neil Caffrey from White Collar. This is me and my wife's favorite freaking show. And if you want to learn how to be like a warm guy is this guy. He's a con artist, which is why he's so good at it. But it's really cool to study his character because you'll see like he's a con artist, but because everyone because he's so likable, people don't want him to get caught because he's that likable. That's how good he is at creating this happiness and warmth. Um, another thing is telling warm and happy stories. So, telling stories that are fun, light-hearted, and valuable. Um, a good way to do this is to take freeze frames of your sales calls. So, what I do this is with my videos, but you can do this with any kind of time that you're speaking and recording. So, what I can do with this module is I can turn the audio off and scrub through it and see how my body language and my face is throughout most of the video. with no audio. Do this with your sales calls. Go through your sales call and just freeze a frame and think, "How warm does this dude look?" Like, forget that it's you. Go through the call, stop it at a random point and think, "Does he look warm?" And if you don't look warm and inviting for most of the call, you got some work to do. And a good quote is, "People usually forget what you say, but they remember how you make them feel." And so what you say is important, but what's just as if, if not more important is how they felt when they were around you because you don't remember what somebody said a week ago, but you remember if you had a good time. So warmth is you leaving them feeling better than you found them. Cool. Number five, competence with humility. So we like people who are generally successful in what they set out to do. People who don't rely on others for every little thing in their life. You you've probably seen these people. You might be one of these people where you can't do anything without asking someone first. And uh having run this coaching offer for a long time, these is this is a lot of y'all. You have to ask for every single little thing. I had one guy uh I can talk about it because it was a long time ago, but he asked me how to share a Google Doc. Like that was a question he had. And I'm just like, brother, if you can't learn how to share a Google doc on your own by googling it or asking Chad GBT or just freaking messing around with Google, it there's no way you make money in entrepreneurship. Um, and so the opposite of that is people who get stuff done. You just tell them what you want and somehow they always get it done. And competent people tend to attract others who want to find safety in that competence. And so a lot of the reason why most of you are here in this course, in this program, is because you saw a glimpse of competence in some of my videos or some of my posts or whatever, and you thought, you know what, I want to be in that guy's program because I feel safer leaning on what he knows, leaning on his competence. And so some of you guys are proof that this is a huge component of likeness because even if I don't have the answers, you trust that I'll be able to go find them. So, these are people that seem to get it. I trust them. I want to follow their lead. But don't get it twisted. Competence isn't just IQ or books smarts. It's not about knowing a bunch of useless crap. Because there's there's a lot of people who know a lot of stuff. Real competence is street smarts. The ability to solve problems, be creative, and get the results, and make things happen in the real world, not just on paper. They've actually done it. They've been through it. they can help me win. And this is why college degrees are misleading because you can hire somebody with a college degree and it their paper says they can do it, but

can they actually get it done? Don't know. All that paper proves to me is they were able to study and memorize some facts the night before. It's all it proves. So, yeah, competence isn't just IQ. It's the ability to just get crap done. Like, do they get the results? Not how smart are they or how many tests have they how many certifications they have. No, bro. Do they make sales? Do they get this task done? That is competence. Now, competence can quickly lead to dislike. So, this can backfire very hard as soon as you become prideful and arrogant. This is straight out of the Bible, right? We like humble people. The last shall be first and the first shall be last. Humility isn't thinking less of yourself. It's simply focusing on others. So people who are arrogant, who only think about themselves in their glory, is a huge turnoff for any audience. But don't be fooled because arrogant people can get a lot of attention. Meaning a lot of likes, a lot of views, a lot of comments, etc. But they don't build trust like a humble person. And trust is what sells. That's the whole thing we're talking about. You see, we're drawn to people who are quote unquote quietly powerful. See, people like to know you're powerful without you telling them. Meaning, whenever your results, your reputation, your skill, your competence speaks for itself, that's when you build this likeness from confidence. So, the more your audience sees you as competent but humble, the more they'll like and trust you. Some examples is this is really simple but it's it's a it conveys a deeper mindset and belief shift. Saying how I in a title versus how to. How to implies that you know what's best and you're going to tell them. How I just says hey this is how I did it. It still has the same outcome of saying you got this result and you're still teaching them how to get the result but it's an attitude change and we like people who are how eyes not howto's. A great example is Sam Sulic. So we'll look at this guy. I mean his entire brand is just just insane. So, this guy is pulling, you know, millions and millions of views because he's extremely competent in what he teaches. As you can tell by the freaking thumbnails, the dude is crazy jacked, but he's humble. If you listen to him talk, he's not going, "All right, here's how you get jacked." He's just saying, "Yo, what's good, guys? Uh, today we're going to hit the gym, show you guys what I eat, and we're get a sick pump." It's humble, but it's still extremely competent. So, look at how he's showing the competence in his thumbnail by saying, "Hey, I'm jacked." So, if you want to listen to me, great. But if not, it's okay. Really cool. Really cool example. He he's actually a great example of a lot of these. Um, another one that happened very recently is Shador Sanders versus Travis Hunter. So, Shador Sanders is Deion Sander. He plays football for you guys that are not from America. And they're going into the draft and Shador Sanders is this really famous football player's son. He was the quarterback. He did really well. And he played on the same team as Travis Hunter. And Travis Hunter was his receiver. And during the draft, Shador had the most extravagant draft day setup I think anyone's ever seen. Bro had like dancers on a pole. He had this entire streaming room. He was live streaming the whole draft. And Dude did not get drafted

first round. He didn't get drafted first day. He didn't get drafted the second day. I think he got drafted on the third day. The most embarrassing draft stream you could have ever imagined. And his signing bonus was 400K. Now, Travis Hunter, on the other hand, was drafted in the first round for $30 million signing bonus. Shador had all this flashiness and talked about how how he was going to go first round. He was so arrogant and prideful and Travis Hunter was just just humble. He didn't talk about how good he was. He just played football really well. And because of that, the NFL team saw him as a good leader, someone they wanted on their team who was going to build their brand, not tear it down with arrogance. And he was paid in proportionate to that belief. So just because this person is skilled doesn't mean it's everything. Do people like you and football is a business whether you like it or not? And so if somebody was going to bring on Shador Sanders to their brand, they were going to bring on that dislike. And so he thought because he was so good at football, he was going to just make millions of dollars immediately. But he forgot to mention that or he forgot to realize that people disliked him and football teams didn't want that on their team. So pretty crazy example. Now the ultimate example is of course Jesus. So Jesus was the most powerful person because he's 100% God, 100% man to ever walk the earth. But you wouldn't have known that just seeing him pass by because he was humble. He didn't ride by on a horse with armies. He came on a donkey with a couple of sinners, disciples beside him. And so if you want to learn more about the Bible and Jesus, I go into detail in this at the end of the mindset course. So if you're interested, please, that'll be the most valuable thing you do this entire life. Check it out. But he's the ultimate example of being extremely powerful, the most powerful in the world, yet humbling himself to the point of dying on the cross for us. That's it. I would be nothing without my faith in Jesus, without God saving me. without him allowing me to to see Jesus being the way, the truth, the life and handing my life over to him. That's why I do all this is to tell people about Jesus and to teach and to serve you guys. So ultimate example is Jesus, the most powerful person ever yet also the most humble. And uh it goes right back to people want to know how powerful powerful you are without you telling them. Jesus would ask who do you say I am? So he asked his disciples or they say, "Oh, or they would uh like the Pharisees and stuff would be he's calling himself." He's like, "Are you the son of God?" And he'd be like, "Um, you've said so." Jesus had the most the most he's the perfect example of ex of all knowing power yet humility to the core. Super cool. So moving on to humor and storytelling. So we like we love we remember people who make us feel something especially if that feeling is happy and engaged slashflow state. And this is why humor and storytelling is OP for making people like and trust you. So when you use humor to make people laugh, they remember feeling happy around you. And when you tell great stories, people are engaged. Think about that one friend who you might not have had so much in common with him. He might be a little bit dumb,

3. Liking-Relatability

but he's just freaking funny. He's just so funny to be around that you always wanted to invite him because you knew he was going to tell some stories. He was going to make jokes. He's going to be a goofball. And we just like people who do that because in both cases, your audience's brain releases dopamine signaling that they enjoyed being around you. So, for some reason, God has hardwired us to enjoy stories. That's why Jesus taught in parables. Jesus taught in stories because the God of the universe understands his creation and people love stories. That's how people remember things. Um, and to be honest, an entire course could be written on storytelling alone. But for now, just remember that humor and stories create heightened emotions in our audience, leaving them feeling a deeper connection with you and your message. Humor makes you likable and stories makes you memorable. So example is think about movie and TV. That's all it is. Movies and TV is usually humor, storytelling. Comedians, we love comedians. But why? Because they think about what they do. All they do is make jokes and tell stories. That's it. Yet comedians are paid millions. Because we like them. We love feeling engaged and laughing. Or think about your favorite YouTubers. They probably tell stories. They probably have some humor. Songs are storytelling. So many songs tell I mean the song itself is a story. Meaning it has it's a roller coaster. It's it's it's slow, then it rises, then it uh crescendos and it falls down. Whatever the terminology is, it's a story. So really cool. Just remember, have some humor, light-hearted, be funny, make some jokes, tell stories in your marketing. We'll go over lots of examples later, so don't worry. Number seven, reciprocity, creativity. The reciprocity principle is one of the basic laws of social psychology, and it says that in many social situations, we pay back what we've received from others. The translation is we tend to like and feel like we owe something or owe someone who's given us something. So those who offer value immediately without asking for something back, it gives goodwill. It builds goodwill. It makes us want to return the favor even subconsciously. So think about free value videos, lead magnets, free trainings, the free samples at Costco. If you wanted to go deeper into reciprocity, I mean, you really don't have to. You just you just need to understand the uh the principle, but if you want to see all the science behind it, there's a great section in in influence talking all about it. So, Robert Cialdini's book, it's really technical and big words. Don't I don't love big words. I like simple. But the principle is the same. Anytime you give stuff away that's valuable for free, people feel like they owe you, which means they they like you more. And think about somebody who helps you out all the time, wouldn't you like that person to be around? Yeah. So, reciprocity. Also, creativity works handinhand with reciprocity because when you take the time to truly create something unique and valuable, people feel more reciprocity and the urge to pay you back is stronger and they like you more. So, wow, that was awesome. I can't believe that was free. I feel guilty for getting that so cheap. The more you show up with generosity and creativity, giving useful, thoughtful, and unexpected value,

3. Liking-Relatability

the more people like, remember, and trust you. So, one of my favorite examples is I'm going to go back to a Runescape YouTuber because, you know, it's my life, guys. I love these guys. His name is Settled. And back in the day, Settled had pretty basic videos, just like everybody else. Simple thumbnails, didn't really have a story. He was just playing the account. It's like a playthrough. But in the past like six or seven years, he turned his channel into telling stories through Runescape. So, he'd build an account and the entire account would be like three years long challenge. uh that would make this massive story. I mean, and it's insane. Like a million people don't play this game, but he's transcended the niche because of how good he's gotten. His most recent video was a finale to his most recent account and story. It's almost got a million views on a Runescape video in less than a month. That's crazy. And here's what's insane. Monday.com. All right, let me skip these ads. Hold on. Show you guys. This is the best example that I've ever found of this, by the way. Like, it is it's crazy. We skip this ad. Look at the storytelling in this video real quick. [Music] [Music] I promise we're going somewhere with this example. I promise. Just watch it, [Music] bro. I kid you not, I shed a tear. I'm not even playing when I first watched this. These are all the accounts that he went through that died on the way to him getting to this challenge. He spent two years getting to this one moment. And he told the story with a freaking like this is not part of the game. This is a custom animation that took like three people working on it. The sound was designed. Like he went all out on this silly game that's 25 years old. But look at what happened. I don't know if you guys can see this. It might not be inside of the frame or not, but um let me see if I can get it in the frame. One second. Um so look at that. People are giving him money. He's not asking for money. All he did was upload a free YouTube video. $10, $100, $200, 20 bucks, $50, $25, $100, 50, $1, $10, 100. This is insane. Look at that. 100, 50, 25, 25. People are giving him thousands of dollars. And he didn't ask for it. He didn't sell anything. All he did was make a video that told a good story and people are throwing money at him. Like you can scroll down. Look at it's it's it's insane, bro. You'd have thought he sold some crazy product. He made one emotional video about a 20-year-old video game. Look at this guy. I'm in tears. That last monologue hit me so hard, bro. It's just crazy. It's crazy. That is what I'm talking about, guys. This is like this stuff is powerful. You just not seen people do it on an elite level. Oh, it's insane. So, that comes from reciprocity and creativity. When you pull your creativity into something that gives to the market, they just feel like they need to give back. They like you. Insane. Yeah. Or think about when someone pays for your food. You feel like you got to get them back. You're like, "Oh, dude, now I owe you one. I have to pay for your food next." You owe him. Number eight, attractiveness and confidence. So, we are more likely to trust and like people who are physically attractive. Now, for me and you, this could be an L, right? Uh some of us not so uh genetically gifted as others in the attractiveness column. Um, you know, I've come a little ways because my middle school self was, you know, ain't nobody liking me back then. Girlfriend, trying to get a girlfriend was was a problem back then. But it's true, right? We are drawn to good-looking people. It's in the freaking word attractiveness. We are attracted to people who look good, and we're more likely to like people who look good. Now, every principle we discuss in this module can play a role in your overall attractiveness. So, how warm you speak, how well you smile, the things you say, being familiar, these are these all go into your attractiveness. But also remember that physical attractiveness is kind of a cheat code to influence. So, the more attractive you can be, the more likely people are to to freak with you. Um, and a really harsh example, I don't know if you guys remember this or not, but it sucks that people work this way, but this is just how people work. I don't know if you remember Corpse Husband from 2020. Corpse Husband did like a lot of the uh um Among Us videos with a lot of famous YouTubers and he had this super deep voice. He talked like this in all the videos and people thought he was like super attractive. Well, someone leaked a picture that may or may not have been this guy and he wasn't the most attractive person and dude's brain literally fell off the cliff like that because he didn't show his face. Everyone thought he was some like attractive anime boy and uh it was just a dude in in his basement that was like overweight making videos with a deep voice and people like left just like that and it's tough. I don't even know if the picture was actually him. That's the craziest part about it. But people are attracted to attractive people. And so we cannot all be Brad Pitt. But the lesson here is to try to look decent when you show up anywhere online. And I'm the last person to be saying this because I don't do well at this this at all. I usually show up in a hoodie with my hair freed up and I I don't really care what I look like most of the time. But just know that this is a this is reality. People like attractive people. There's a reason why all movie stars are for the most part very attractive. And if they're not very attractive, what are they? They're extremely funny and warm. So it's either one of the above. Keep that in mind. Keep that in mind. Um, also confident. So attractive and confidence. This one is simple. It's very simple. It ties back into the safe emotion from the text and subtext module. We feel safe around conf confident people and we want to be led by people who feel confident in their own skin and their own abilities. And just think about it, why would you place your confidence in someone who isn't confident in themself? So if someone's not confident, it's hard for other people to trust be confident in them because they don't even trust themself. But just remember that arrogance isn't the same as confidence. You can be confident in yourself without being boastful. So remember the humility principle example. Think about the popular the popular kids in school. I was not one of these kids because I was not confident in myself. I was super unconfident. So people didn't want to be around me because well I wasn't confident. Think about actors. They're usually extremely confident. Musicians, writers who write with confidence. We'll go over some examples of confident writing at the end of this module. TED talks and speakers who speak with confidence. Imagine if I did this whole module like this. Imagine if I just um said, "Hey," and we like people who are extremely skilled at what they do. If I don't speak with confidence, these modules are going to fall flat. They're not going to work. I could go over the same exact text, but if you guys don't feel like I freaking believe this stuff, then you're not going to act on it, which means it's not going to work. Confidence is huge, and it comes from belief. So go through the belief module in the mindset module. So yeah, attractive confidence, especially when anytime you're speaking or you have someone who's making content, man, they got to be confident. Otherwise, it's just not going to work. So talk about things that you've done. Talk about stuff you believe in. Practice being confident in front of the camera. You got to be confident. Number nine, skill and social proof. So we like people who are extremely skilled at what they do. Here's the cool part. even if it's a skill that we aren't interested in or don't find that useful. So if someone is best in the world at something, even if it's quote unquote useless, we naturally see them as having a heightened level of aura. And this is because we ascribe more value to things that are scarce. So if there's only one person in the world who's that good, we see them as valuable because it's scarce. So, an example is you hear that an Olympic gold medalist is living in your town and even if they're a gold medalist in the stupidest sport ever, I'm not going to say any sports. I'm not going to offend anybody, but you know what I'm talking about. Those sports where you're like, "That's in the Olympics. The freak." You still find them pretty cool. You still want to probably, you know, figure out more about them. You still want to check out their Instagram. Why? because they're an Olympic gold medalist. Even if it's in the sweeping category where they sweep floors, you still are like, "Well, they're the best sweeper in the world. That's kind of cool. Let me talk to them." And this is I really think this is because skill signals safety and confidence. So really skill shows that you have this competence, confidence and it's safe because if someone is very skilled at the thing they do, you're likely to trust that they can get the results they say. And skill usually leads to having social proof. And social proof in persuasion is a psychological phenomenon where individuals are influenced by the actions and beliefs of others to make decisions. And so the KJ speak the translation the the dumb version is we're more likely to like and do stuff that other people like and do. And so if you see somebody with a million followers, you're more likely to follow them than somebody with a hundred because subconsciously you think, "Wow, if a million people are already following them, they're probably worth following." Even if they give you no reason to follow them besides just that number on the screen, you're more likely because of social proof, if other people are doing it, if other people like it, you want to do it and like it because we're just that's how God has made us. We like community. We like to fit in. And so if other people are doing something, you want to you think, "Oh, okay. I'll do it." And think about this with something you thought was kind of lame or boring. Maybe something you thought was boring, wasn't that cool, but all a sudden everybody at school gets into it and everyone starts doing it and you're like, "Well, maybe it is kind of cool." Nothing changed about it besides other people like it and now you want to like it. Example here would be athletes when it comes to skill. Artists when it comes to skill, think about artists like they don't artists pop up a lot. Pop off a lot on Instagram. One because of creativity and cool, but also because it's just skill. Like think about when you see someone drawing a portrait with their foot. People do that and you're like, "Frig me, that's pretty cool. It's stupid. It's useless. Why not just draw with your hand? Why are you drawing with your foot?" I don't know. It probably stinks, right? But a stinky pencil, but it's it's still skill and you're still like, "Ah, it's kind of cool." And so skill goes into liking and influence. Uh, another example would be speedrunners. So, I've seen videos of people speedrunning Mario Kart and speedrunners who try to get diamonds in Minecraft. It's the most stupid, you know, useless thing ever, but it still requires a lot of skill and talent. And those people have a lot of followings and you're kind of like, "Wow, that's kind of cool." Like we talked about people with a lot of followers, it's easier to follow people. It's it's a snowball because the more people who follow you, the more people are likely to follow you because they see other people doing it. Monkey see, monkey do. Um, they talk about this a lot in YouTube circles, but there's like a 10K sub ceiling. So, whenever you don't get views on YouTube videos, it's very hard for the video to get views. Why? Because not many people have viewed it. And so, it's social proof against you versus you ever see a thumbnail and you're like, "That video probably has a 100red views." But you look at it and it has 2 million and you click on it because you're like, "Why the freak does it have so many views?" That's social proof. you see other people clicking on it and you're like, "Oh, it must be good. Let me click on it." And so, the hardest part about being a YouTuber for a lot of times is getting past that 10,000 subscriber ceiling. Getting past that thousand plays, 5,000 plays on every video because once you get 5,000, people are like, "Oh, okay. 5,000 people like this. Let me check it out." Versus you seeing a video with 20 views, you don't want to click on it. Um, another thing would be we've helped 75 plus copywriters. We talk about 75, 100, 150, whatever we've served at this point in the market. Copy has helped 75 plus copywriters get clients. When you hear that, you're like, "Okay, well, if 75 other people did it, surely it'll work for me. I can trust it." There you go. Um, another example is I see a lot of YouTubers screw this up. Not in the business space, but in like, you know, entertainment. They say they'll pause the video and be like, "Real quick, I see that 70% of you guys are not subscribed, so please subscribe now so we can fix this number." And what they're doing is the opposite. You're showing your audience that most of your audience isn't subscribed, which subconsciously tells them that I shouldn't subscribe because most people aren't. And you want to do what most people do. So, don't ever do that if you're a YouTuber

because it's the opposite of persuasion. You're you're dissuading them. Um, now 10. Anti-beneficiary bias. Non- needy. We like people who don't seem like they need to be liked. People who are quote unquote non-needy. And this can be explained by what I call the anti-beneficiary bias. What beneficiary bias means is we like things that benefit us. And so that's how I came up with the term anti-beneficiary because I was wondering, okay, why do people like non- needy people? Like what's the what's the first principal explanation? And here it is. We're less trusting of people who have more to gain from an exchange than ourselves. Because they have more to gain, there's a higher chance that they'll act unethically. So a concrete example is I want you to imagine that you see Bill Gates on the street and he hands you a $100 bill. Now, imagine a homeless man stops you on the street and he gives you a $100 bill. Who are you less trusting of? If you're like everybody, probably the homeless person. If a homeless man gave you a hundred, you'd be like, "All right, where's your buddy with a knife? Where am I about to get stabbed? Like, what's the plan? Is this fake? Is this counterfeit? Like, what's going on?" You don't trust him. Why? Because he has a lot to gain from that hundred. So, the whole exchange doesn't make sense versus Bill Gates. He wipes his butt with a $100 bill. So if he gave you one, you probably wouldn't question it. You'd be like, "All right, well, it's just a rich dude feeling bad for himself today and just giving away money, whatever." So it all depends on how much you have to gain from the exchange. And so the more non- needy you are, the more you appear to not care. Like it doesn't matter whether someone buys from you or not, the more they want to buy with from you because they trust you. And so the more non need you are, the more trusting people will be. Non- neediness also signals confidence and competence. which makes your counterpart in the exchange feel safer. So if someone sounds super needy, you're kind of like, eh, I don't know about this. It also makes the confidence go down, competence seems lower, social proof seems down. Because if you were non- needy, they might think that you have clients and you're chilling. You don't need another client. Versus if you say if you come across super needy, it's like, okay, this person clearly doesn't have any clients, which means they shouldn't have me. I'm a client and I don't want to do what other people aren't doing. So, um, excuse me. Good example would be, um, I got a lot of examples on YouTube of me going through seasons of this. You go through seasons where you're so focused on the views that you come across as just needy versus when I didn't focus on views, I was pulling like numbers. And so, it's a constant battle of doing the right things to get more views without it coming across as needy. Another one is editing breakthroughs. So, we discovered that our editing was super needy. We were pretty much screaming for people, hey, please watch the video. Please, we need your attention. We need your views. Versus when we edited in much more of a subtle, non- needy, just accenting what I'm saying, it was so much better. It felt non- needy. It felt valuable. And it didn't feel like we were trying to force someone to watch the video. But we were just saying, "Hey, we got dope stuff. Check it out if you want." Non- needy. Um, relationships. Think about this in your relationships. There's so many talks about how you shouldn't be needy in a relationship because the girl's going to take off because it's just something inside of us. We don't like needy people because we feel like they can't be trusted. There's something wrong there. So even if you have nothing going on and you're about to go homeless, don't be needy. It's only going to do more harm than good. So even if you have nothing, appear like you have everything. Act in a place in abundance. And uh the cheat code here is once again faith in Jesus. And the times when I'm fully reliant on God and trusting that God's going to take care of me regardless of the situation is when I'm non- needy because I don't need anybody else's help. I have God and I know he's going to get me through. He's he's provided for me time and time again. The Bible says that he clothe the flowers. He feeds the birds. How much more will he feed you? He loves you. How much more will he provide for you? It's not to say that we're going to be rich because rich can sometimes lead us further away from God. So that would be a negative thing in a lot of scenarios. It's just saying that he's going to take care of you. He's got you in his hands. Um yeah, it's awesome. Praise God. And so Paul says that godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into the world, we can take nothing out of it. But if we have food and clothing, we'll be content with that. And so by not needing a bunch of things, guess what? You appear non- needy versus even if you're a billionaire, if you keep you need more money, you need to have this deal, you need connections, you still come across as needy even though you have a billion dollars. So it's a state of mind, not a bank account threshold. Keep that in mind. All right. Number 11, uh the cult leader five. So Blair Warren, a fellow lifelong student of persuasion, he wrote in his book one sentence persuasion that there is one sentence that can explain the most influential movements in human history. And that sentence is as followed. People will do anything for those who encourage their dreams, justify their failures, allay their fears, confirm their suspicions, and help them throw rocks at enemies. This is what I refer to as the cult leader five. Now, I've not name I've not renamed it just so I can somehow like copyright the name of this. I've renamed it that for a very specific reason, and that's because it is as powerful as the name sounds. And I just I don't want you to take this lightly because I've I've done this in the past and and caused pain for myself and my audience by just not understanding the power of these and being very careful. Um, so whenever you're using these five angles in your marketing, you must be careful because these are real people on the other side of the screen. Like I know that right now I'm talking to a screen recorder, but I know that you on the other side of this are a real person. And I want to be very careful to not say things and, you know, influence you in a way that's that's not productive, a way that's not uh honest and truthful, a way that's seeking my own good and not

your good. Because this is how a lot of people do this guys. They they pretty much lie. They bin the truth to increase their bank accounts and drain yours. Um so be careful to not become one of those people. So without further ado, let's take a look at the top five or the the five here. Number one is encourage their dreams. So most of us have big dreams or we had big dreams as a as a child. But somewhere along in our lives, parents, teachers, or just the the brutal reality of of the world, it convinces us to be more reasonable and let go of these big dreams, to settle for average, play it safe. So when someone comes along and tells us that we can achieve those dreams and they encourage us to shoot for the stars and take the risk, we can become very easily influenced by them. Think about it. We want that person to be right and so we tell ourselves that they are. If they encourage our dreams, we're like, "Yeah, you're right. You're right. You're right." All of a sudden, we start saying they're right to everything else they're saying, too. So, be very careful. Number two, justify their failures. Although deep down we know that we have to assume responsibility for all of our actions and the situation that we're in in life, we don't like it. We don't like that fact. I know that where I'm at is my responsibility, but how much easier would it be to blame the market, to blame my team, to blame the people who just don't get it? They don't see the vision. It's a lot easier to blame other people. And so when people tell us that, hey KJ, don't worry, man. It's not your fault. It's because of this. It's because the market. It's because of these people. It's because the government. Well, we naturally want to believe them. This is a politician favorite. In fact, all of these are politician favorites. But think about it. They blame this taxes. They blame the other country. They blame China. They blame these people who are coming in. They blame everything else for your failures. So that so that you like them and you vote for them and you support their agendas. Number three, allay their fears. So we hate being scared or feeling in danger. I don't mean like scary movie scared. I mean like literally scared for your life, feeling in danger. And even if someone doesn't solve that problem or make it go away, if they make us feel safer, we want to trust them. And so when you're scared, you want to be with someone who distracts you from those fears or makes them feel non-existent. We don't want to be around someone who heightens those fears. And so someone who tells us that, "Hey, dude, it's going to be okay. It's all good. Don't worry about that. It's fine. That thing that you think is dangerous, it's not that bad." Those people can easily influence us. So watch out. Number four, confirm their suspicions. As humans, as prideful flesh human beings, we love being right. We love saying, "I knew it." We love saying, "I told you so." And this makes it very easy for someone to influence us using this principle. Because they can confirm the suspicions you already have and you feel attached to that person and you want to trust them. This is a cult leader classic straight out of the book. They confirm their suspicions of their members. They say, "Hey, your family is out to get you. Your family doesn't want you to experience the real life, the fullness of having riches and all this and uh transcendence." And so, by confirming their suspicions, they make their followers far more fall more in love with the cult and abandon their families. Um, we'll go over a lot of examples of this in marketing. Very, very powerful. Anytime you see the words like it's true or you were right, they're confirming your suspicions, right? Number five, throw rocks at enemies. The enemy of our enemy is our friend. And so we like hating on people. Um it's part of, you know, like you you like to hate on things that you don't like. There's something about it. This is why like sports teams are so can be so similar to like Colts is because it's, you know, I like when people say, "Hey, the Lions are going to win the Super Bowl next year. They're going to be there." Yeah, freak the Packers. The Eagles suck. Like the enemy of our enemy is our friend. And so when someone throws shade on people that we don't like, we get excited. We immediately feel like a friend to that person. We feel like we're on the same side. And this is extremely powerful. You see this daily in politics, in YouTube drama, in sales messages everywhere. And um we'll go over examples of of this in detail as well, but it's like in my sales page, uh my old sales page where I threw rocks at at Andrew Tate's course and I threw rocks at the Tik Tok marketing scams, whatever I called it. Like we're throwing rocks at the same things. You feel like, "Oh man, KJ, he gets me. He's on my side. He's on my team. I can trust him." Once again, liking trust. the whole point of this module. Um, now real quick, if you're feeling a bit overwhelmed, please don't worry. We're going to cover many examples of this uh in action in a full marketing effort. Um, it's also impossible to understand these in one day, okay? It's going to take you some time. All great things do. But be excited because now that you've been shown these principles, you're going to start to see them everywhere. I'm talking everywhere. your life will never be the same because you're going to start to realize why you like people and brands and then you're going to transfer those insights and tactics into your own marketing. Very exciting. And uh yeah, bonus points if you notice what I just did there by saying this. Don't worry. Um all right, cool. I'm going get some water and then we'll push on with the rest of this module. Leveraging likeness. Let's talk about how to integrate these principles directly into your copy. So, in text and subtext, we discuss how to leverage the subtext of your copy to push the big four general emotions. But once you've decided what emotion to push, it's time to decide how to push it. So, you can't just say, "Hey, this thing is going to be easy." You can in some scenarios, but most cases, you're going to imply that it's the subtext. So, you have to choose the best text to convey the subtext. So, just like how you can say mouse in a lot of different languages, it still means the same thing, but it's a different different way of saying mouse. I don't know what the Spanish version is or I would say it, but like English mouse, Spanish, whatever you want to call it. So, we're we're implying the same thing, but how we say it can determine how well someone likes us and how well we actually push that emotion. It'll make a lot more sense in a second.

3. Liking-Relatability

So this is where we can leverage the 11 variables of likeness in the text, meaning the how we push the emotion. So although there's a limited amount of emotions you can push, like there's there's not unlimited emotions, right? We only have a certain amount of emotions, there's an infinite way you can push them, which is cool. This is where your talent, your creativity of a copyriter comes into play. And this is why AI is not going to take over this thing anytime soon. What's going to happen is great copywriters who use AI will replace bad copyriters. So AI is just a tool. It's like it's like a carpenter going from a a hammer and a nail to a nail gun. But you still have to know the art of carpentry. You still have to become a copyriter, a marketer. And this is how uh let's go over an example. So, the subtext, the emotion we're trying to push is, "Wow, that seems easy and safe." So, that's the emotion we want our reader to to feel. Look at these different ways we can push this. We even had a 17-year-old from Portugal sign a client one month after using the system. It's like, okay, well, if a 17-year-old did it, then maybe it's it's easy, right? That's the the subtext. Or how about this? After 45 copywriters used the system, only one person didn't sign a client. And that's because that one person became so skilled from our copy course that clients started reaching out to him before he started outreach. So here we're using a little bit of humor, a little bit of unexpected, you know, scenario here. Or the third one, we built this system with one principle in mind. So easy a monkey could sign a client. And my little brother got a client using that. So that means that we're pretty close. So once again, using some humor. Um, it's just funny. It's all pushing the same emotion, though. All of these cause you to think, "Okay, wow, this is safe. This is predictable. This is easy." And so, there's a million ways to push the same emotions. And the secret is to pick the best way to push that emotion. And best means it creates the most likeness and trust in your audience. So, how do we do that? Well, that brings me to the price is right framework. So, this might look a little bit confusing, but um let me show you an example for you youngans out there. Um great YouTube ads. So, there's this old game show that my parents used to watch called The Price is Right. And on this show, they would spin this giant wheel. It's like the Wheel of Fortune, but they turned it vertical. Um let's watch him spin it. So, you can see right there, it's really low quality. This guy spun this wheel. So this is determining how much money he's going to get. So here we see Derek spin the sucker and you see the wheel come down and stop on 50. This is exactly how you can view text and subtext and how you can change the text to convey the subtext better. So let me give you an example. So um here we have bro man male guy person. So, it's all referring to the same thing, a dude, a male. But you see how you can convey dude in so many different ways. It's like spinning the wheel. And just like the wheel, no matter what number he landed on, he would have gotten some money, but some numbers would have given him more money. The same is true of our copy. Some words can convey more emotions and have more of a story to them than some other words. And so by spinning this wheel, by figuring out, okay, what is every way I can say this noun, this verb, this whatever, figuring out which one is best. So we have bro, man, male, guy, person. Like you could interchange these words together. Um, and you can do this for every single word in your copy. I don't advise you to do that for every word, but you can rearrange each phrases. And I'll show you an example in a second. Um, but it's cool because every word, like I said, it has an emotion or feeling tied to it and it tells its own little story. It's your job to find the perfect words and their arrangement for your audience. This is why specific conditions is is important. Because if I was talking to a bunch of professional corporate people, am I going to say bro in my email? Probably not. But if I'm talking to you guys, 16 to 25 year olds on YouTube watching a goofy guy or uh in a program watching this goofy dude with a hood talk about copy in a weird familiar way, I'm going to say, bro. And so it all depends on specific conditions. So let's go over an example of of the where I learned this concept which made it really concrete for me. This is in the AdWee copyrightiting handbook. They use this example. So imagine what what do you see when you hear an old woman in a motel? What do you see? What do you feel like? It feels kind of cold. Maybe a dark. You imagine dark like already. What about a little old lady in a cottage? That seems completely different, doesn't it? It's a whole different movie going on in your head. Different emotion. It's the same thing. An old woman in a motel and a little old lady in a college. It's the same. A cottage is the same thing, right? It's an old woman staying overnight in some place. Um, but the different words have different story and emotion. So, there are multiple ways to say the same thing. So, notice the different emotions with each. And when you push the emotions, meaning the subtext, using the best selection of words possible, meaning the text, magic happens. So, if you have to decide, okay, what do I want to push right here? And you want to push the easy emotion. If you get that correct and then you also get correct how you push that emotion like it lines up with a specific condition. So you pick the right general condition then the right specific conditions of how you push it. That's when the magic happens. Um so here here's the little three-step framework and I'll show you a lot of examples. So the first step is finding specific conditions. This is why that module is so important. If you don't have clear and accurate conditions of the audience you're speaking to, it's going to be very hard, if not impossible, to choose the most effective text, meaning the way to push the emotions. So, even if you get the general conditions right, if you don't have the specific conditions, you won't know how to how to flavor it, how to tailor it to your audience. Now, hear me out. You can still push the emotions. it will just sound very vanilla and generic because you'll have to play it safe since you don't know exactly who you're writing to. And see, I've I've reviewed hundreds of hours of copy from you guys in Copy Lead. I used to do every single copy review every single day without any help. Reviewed a lot of copy and I realized that if I don't know exactly who you're talking to, I can't really review your copy that well. I can tell you how well you push the general conditions. So, I can tell you if you're pushing emotions right, but I can't tell you if your text is right. I can't tell you if you're pushing those emotions in the right way. I can make assumptions, but if I truly don't know the audience, then I I can't really help you. That's how important specific conditions are. But as soon as you give me context of who these people you're talking to, you know, you show me their condition deck, then I can review the copy and be like, "Oh, yeah, maybe you shouldn't say bro right here because these are 40-year-old people. Maybe don't say that." Or, uh, yeah, or maybe your language is too educated and you're selling to teenagers or kids. So, yeah, step one is finding specific conditions. Step two is choosing the subtext. And so before you figure out how to write something, you need to know what you're going to write. And that comes from the subtext. So decide which emotion are you trying to push with this section of copy. And I'll show you in a second like how I do this. Um, but this makes it so much easier to write copy instead of staring at a blank piece of page or a blank um, Google doc. You're literally saying, "Okay, I need to make this feel big. I need to make this feel easy. I need to make this seem relatable to them." Now that you have those things you need to do, you can figure out how to do it, which is step three, choosing the text. This is how you spin the prices right wheel to go through the different ways you can say something until you find one that really hits. So, the final step is testing a bunch of different ways. Notice what I said there, testing. It's highly unlikely you're ever going to write something first draft and it's just going to be the best. It's going to be perfect. It's going to come through repetition, through testing. And this is where something like chat GBT can come in handy because if you already have good taste, if you already understand your audience, you can use chat GBT to give you so many different examples for you to then choose the best one. You can't ask it which one is the best because it doesn't know. But you can you can ask for examples. It'll give you those and then you can decide which one is the best based on specific conditions. And so the key is to write a ton of examples. Then put yourself in the mind of the audience by studying your specific conditions and then decide which version of the text you think will resonate more with them. So let's go over a real life example. So I was writing this VSSL for my my daily channel. So my daily channel they are not aware they're not as aware of you guys are of copyrightiting. So on my main channel, everyone who watches me knows what copyrightiting is because my whole channel is about copyrightiting. On the daily channel, I just talk about business and life and all this kind of stuff. So I had to write a whole different VSSL because it's a different avatar, different awareness level. And so what I did first was I would I outlined the VSSL how I wanted it to look like. And so I did this big framework and then I did micro frameworks inside of the VSSL. And then for every single one of those, the wise, I I did a million different variations. And so, look at this. Here's a good example. Reaffirm. Don't worry, brother. I got you. If any of those sound like you, don't worry. If you're in one of these three situations, don't worry. I got you. If one of these bullets sounds like you, don't worry. And this might seem like overkill, but this is how you make a cool piece of copy. And then what I did is I did like two to three var four variations of this. And so I put all of those onto a Google doc where I took my favorite ones and kind of expanded on them. And then I did it again and created a V4. And so all that to say that the best copy comes through a lot of iteration and and taste and time. Um, not to say you can't write good qu copy quickly. You can. But to write great copy, meaning it's perfectly tailored to the audience you're going to give it to, it pushes all the right things. That takes time. Um, some of the best copywriters to ever exist, would spend months just doing research, not even writing, just doing research on what they were selling and who they were selling to. That's how it should be done, guys. Anyone selling you something else is just they're not they're not telling you the truth. Um, they're just trying to sell you. And so, here's an example. So, I wanted to target the stream customer profile number one. And so, I wrote all these bullets. I just drained my brain of everything I could write. And then what I would do is I would take little pieces that I like and start piecing it together. And by the end, I started to get to a really a really good one. It's like you're trapped in school and looking for a way out. You're tired of watching 16 to 20 year olds get rich online while you sit on the sidelines trying to finish your English paper. You're just as obsessed as them. You're just as smart as them. But you've been wasting your talent on video games and useless classes. You're ready to lock in, make some money online, and create the future you want for yourself, but you just need the road map. And so, that's that's pretty far. I'm pretty happy with that little segment right there. But look at how it started out, right? Even though you're young, it's obvious. You know, you have an S tier entrepreneur potential, but you're trapped in an F-tier education system. You're bored out of your mind. You need a challenge. You know, you need to lock in and start obsessing over online business. The problem is you don't know where to start. So, this isn't terrible, right? But it's not near as punchy and near as emotional as this one, even though it sounds very similar. If you look at them, it's a big difference. And so that's how you do this guys is you make sure you know your audience and then you choose the subtext what you want to push how you like what do you what what you're trying to accomplish with this section and then you test and iterate how you can do that and the power comes oh sorry getting a phone call it was Caleb if you see this Caleb I love you it's my editor but um and best The power comes from effectively integrating the 11 variables in step three. So step three, when you actually choose the text, that's when you integrate these these things we just talked about. So for example, let's go through and show you some some things, some pieces of copy before and after applying some of these principles. Uh number one, relatability. So here we have a pain bullet. Before you can just say your life sucks. It sounds general. It's vague. I mean, it it creates a little bit of pain, but does it really create any likeness? Not really. How about after you survive school, but the nine-to-five grind is killing you from the inside out. You can't imagine doing this for another year, let alone 40. What you learned in school isn't useful. You feel completely replaceable. I've been there, man. So, here we're doing the same thing, right? Your life sucks. But because we know who we're targeting, we can create a lot more pain. And guess what? We're also being relatable. We're talking about how we felt the way they feel. And because we know their specific conditions, we've accurately talked about how they actually feel. So they're like, "Wow, this dude knows me. He's been there. He can help." So you can see how that's a lot more powerful than your life sucks. This is like an average person versus an average copywriter who uses that GBT as a crutch who doesn't understand these things versus someone who gets it who's competent copywriter. Okay, let's talk about familiarity with an offer headline. So think about this. This is like tailored to you guys. So sign three to five business owners using our proven acquisition system. So, those of you guys who, you know, before you got super deep into the weeds on this, you probably don't even know what acquisition meant and business owners sounds kind of scary. Versus sign three to five copyrighting clients using our proven outreach system. Do you see how it's saying the same thing? The same thing. Copyrighting clients are business owners. You're not going to sign a client that doesn't own a business. Also, acquisition system is the same as outreach system. But do you see how I'm using words that are more familiar to you, which creates trust and specificity and matches specific conditions? And so, if you see a headline that says, "Sign three to five copyrighting clients using our proven outreach system," you're like, "Got to check that out." But if you see a headline that says, "Sign three to five business owners using our proven acquisition system," do you see how it just doesn't spark in your head because you're a copywriter? because you don't really know that language that well. It doesn't seem familiar versus this familiar. And what's cool is the more times you see this, the more you start to kind of have this liking towards it. There's obviously a fall-off here, meaning like if you showed this, if you'd seen this before from 15 other people, it wouldn't hit as hard. But if you're seeing this from me 15 times, you're going to like it and trust it more just because you're seeing it more. Pretty crazy, huh? Pretty crazy. Think about a lot of you that bought Copy Elite. We've run a survey and most people who bought Copy Elite, it was one, it was like around two to four months of you watching me before buying into the program. Why is that? Was the program any different from four months? Like, well, yeah, I guess it was. The program gets better quickly as you guys can tell. But like you didn't know that at the time. What was that two to four months? It was you trusting me and liking me more and more and more to the point where it got to the certain point you're like, you know what? Freak it. This is a great idea. I need to do this. I need to be in copy. And that's how we got there. Um, pretty cool. Next, authenticity. So, this is like reaffirming and allaying fears. So, if that sounds like you right now, don't worry. Simple statement. you you wouldn't think anything of this, but this is what I used in my sales page. If that's you right now, I've got your back, brother. Notice how different that sounds. And some people would get mad at me like, "Well, what about the females and audience?" Look, my female audience is like 2%. So, if that's y'all, bro, shout out to you. Shout out to you, sister. I guess I should say. Um, but that's not the majority of my audience. And I found that the females who really uh I don't know why I'm saying females. The girls who really love my stuff, they just buy anyway. Like it, one word is not gonna piss them off. But with the 98% of people who are guys, this feels different. It says, if that's you right now, I've got your back, brother. It's like that sounds warm and and inviting and it matches specific conditions versus if that sounds like you right now, don't worry. And it's not authentic, right? It's not me. I don't talk like that. I would say, dude, if that's you, don't freaking worry, bro. That's authenticity. And so by putting that into my sales page, you have to be careful here because um if it's a cold traffic, people don't know just by your writing if you're being authentic or not because they don't know you. So they don't really know. But because it's organic, because you guys have seen me before, you know who I am. This sounds super authentic versus the top one. Cool. Next is humor. So notice how we're using humor to amp up this easy emotion. So we talked about this earlier, right? The system is so easy to run even a monkey could do it. Not that funny, but it is it is kind of conveying the emotion, right? Easy. How about this? We built this system with one goal in mind. Make it so easy a monkey could sign a client with it. And my little brother just got a client using it. So that means we're getting pretty dang close. So yeah, it's not great. Like it's funny. It's humor. It's light-hearted. All of a sudden, you trust me a little bit more because it doesn't sound like everyone else. It's creative. You might might got a chuckle out of it, a laugh, you know, and that's is, you know what I'm saying? It's cool. I don't know how it's it makes you happy. It's like, ah, that's funny. You know, it takes some of that seriousness and just kind of excels out a little bit. It's cool. Um, maybe maybe I just hate people who don't like who are all like uptight about everything. That could just be a partial thing, but I I I found in my experience, people just love some humor. They love if you just don't feel so heavy about everything. Next, storytelling. So, you could say, "I've been there, too. I was broke and dumb." That's just a not even a story, just saying, "Hey, I've been there." Whatever. Relating to their pain. Or you could tell a specific story that shows how dumb and broke you were. I.e., dude, trust me, I've been there. So, back in 2009, I was so dumb and broke that I kid you not, I went to my uncle's house and I needed gas money. On the way there, I saw someone buying cars for cheap. And so, I sold them my car for gas money. How stupid is that? Anyways, you see what I'm saying? Like, that's a terrible example, but I thought it was so funny. I just I don't know. Oh, guys. Hey, I'm showing some authenticity, right? I'm showing you some humanity right here by being so stupid. But you get what I'm saying. Just tell a story because stories engage people and they're they're believable. They they house a lot of these other principles inside of them. Um, if you want to look at some of the great ones, look at the best TED talks. If you'll notice, the best TED talks, they all have stories. They introduce this big idea. They tell a story that's relatable and conveys the concept and has humor and authenticity and it has relatability. Um yeah, and then you love them. You want to hear the rest of the stuff because there's actually a storytelling. Cool confidence. So here we have um just some copy. This could be a big opportunity for you. So this could be a big opportunity for you versus this opportunity will change your life forever. I say this with with 100% certainty because it radically changed my life. So notice the confidence in the big emotion just by saying this opportunity will change your life or this could be a big opportunity for you. Um yeah, so this is just like one little example of confidence, but it really just you'll notice by reading someone's entire piece of copy how confident they are based on like what they say. And instead of using might and could and maybe and all this, it's just this will this is, you know, you get what I'm saying? And then obviously on camera, being confident in the way you speak is huge. Huge. Uh it's going to be hard for anyone to buy a VSSL from someone like, um, yeah, like you should you should probably book a call because like I I think I can help. It's like, bro, who wants to buy from that guy? So anyways, these are just a few of the endless ways you can integrate these principles to power up your copy and develop likeness. Um, with some practice, you'll find that integrating these principles will not only become second nature, but you'll have so much fun creatively adding them in new ways that no one's done before. This is why we this is why we write copyright. This is why we're marketers is because we want to just create powerful, effective, money-making ideas and pieces of of copy. This is why we do it. And it'll this will make so much fun. But I have so much fun every time I write copy. It's just it's awesome. But only if you understand these principles and you know how to apply them because it's fun because it works, right? when you make a video that that blows up and you like one of the first pieces of copy I wrote like about two months into being a copyriter. Uh it blew up this guy's channel. He got like 300,000 views on a YouTube video and it was a VSSL and so he made a lot of money off of it and it was just the most fun thing ever because it I used all these things and it worked and it was awesome. So yeah. Um, but due to their quantity, I know that these principles can seem a little bit overwhelming at first, but I just don't want you guys to stress it. It'll take you time to master them all, but I kid you not, just the fact that you know this concept exists puts you ahead of 99% of other people. Like, they don't even know this stuff exists. So, the best thing you can do is just don't sweat it. Just start slowly implementing these as you see them into your marketing as a whole. And what I've done is to make these principles as simple as possible, I added them to your conditions deck template. So now you will find that there's a brand new section. Um, shout out to you, whoever's on this. There's a brand new section called section five where I ask these questions of how can you add these things into your marketing. And like I said, we'll go over examples in just a second. Um, so yeah, let's do that right now. Let's go over these examples in real marketing strategies from your favorite personal brands. So, we're going to go over Hamza, Dan Co., we've got some extras on here for you guys to check out and then we'll go over how you can do this yourself. So, let's get into it. Oh, this is the fun part. Hamza. So, if you guys don't know Hamza, he is a self-improvement YouTuber. He blew up, I want to say about three, four years ago. I owe a lot to Hamza because he honestly put me on to so many of these things that we're talking about now. He actually told me about the book that led to me discovering copyrighting. So, shout out to Hamza. I'm not sure exactly how things are going right now. I know he's had some kind of ups and downs and changed his strategy and whatnot, but we're going to look at like prime Hamza when he was getting millions of views, making hundreds of thousands of dollars per month. We're going to look at that. So, check out the relatability and similarity. Why I quit playing Minecraft relatability, how to stop being a nice guy, why you don't like being you. This is why you feel lost and unhappy in life. Why video games aren't fun anymore. All of these things are extremely relatable. And look at the thumbnails he's using. He's using memes. He's using Minecraft. He's using like, you know, animated stuff. This is all targeting his his audience. Um because that's what they want. They're that age. So titles are directly targeting the viewer. Um it resonates with the specific conditions perfectly matches the awareness but this is um I uh ideal customer profile thumbnails that resonate with the problem. Yeah, he's targeting the problems they feel. He's talking about how he feels the way they feel. Cool. Um familiarity, consistency. So here we have consistently posting for a long time. And look at the way the thumbnails look. They're very familiar. I remember clicking on a lot of these guys. I watched so many of these. Very familiar. That was a great video, by the way. that one. Same here. Posting frequently with consistency for years. Similar thumbnails create familiarity. Yeah, simple. Um, authenticity, humanity. So, Hamza was was so good at this. He had a second channel which he called Hamza unfiltered where he would just talk about his thing. He would talk about his failures. He talk about successes. like he was really the first one to kind of make a that I know that had like a real cult following on YouTube by using these principles. Um he had this is like a lot more like relatability and and humor, but he would use this Jeffrey versus Adonis analogy and he used these in all of his intros. So this was specific to his audience. Like do you see the level of detail here? like he could have just sat down and made videos like he used to, but instead he went in depth on creating an entire like world for his audience and just a cult following. Um, also the way that he spoke. So, he changed his voice a lot when I first started following him. So, he went from like just talking like I normally am to hello, it's Hamza.

In today's video, we're going to talk about how you can get girls. He just developed this warm and happy smiley kind of look at him. He's right. Um yeah, confidence with humility. Pretty cool humor and storytelling. He used these storytelling things like perfection. So the first 30 seconds was this hyperanimated scene which displayed what his audience was going through and how they felt about it, which was the problem he would target in his video. I mean, he nailed it, guys. He was crushing it. Um, reciprocity, creativity. Here he is posting hour-long uh guides for men. He could have charged $100 for that, but he gave them away. Attracted his confidence. Like, I mean, it's it's Hamza, right? He's attractive looking dude. Super confident. Um, skill and social proof. Like, his his comment section was full of testimonials. Like, it was like social proof the whole time. Anti-beneficiary bias. He would give away a lot of stuff. Um, yeah, you guys can check out all the breakdowns and all this, but he did this the whole time, man. The cult leader five. He would justify failures, encourage dreams. I remember he used to throw rocks at other YouTubers way back in the day. I think I think we've all learned that lesson. Like, it's not a great strategy. But whenever we all first started out, we were like, "Oh, why this person's a scammer and you shouldn't, you know, buy this person's thing. This guy sucks." Like, it's always throwing rocks enemies. and he did that versus uh Andrew KBY. What's funny is him and Andrew are like friends now, which is hilarious, but he used to crap on him so much. Um yeah, so pretty cool. That's Hamza. Uh we have another for Dan Co. What I'm actually do is we're going to go over the Mint Mobile because I think this be cool to see how a personal brand does it versus like this is a brand if you don't know Mint Mobile, they are a phone company. So a service provider, sales service provider. This is like the oldest freaking boomer industry you could think of that doesn't have hardly any any like new innovation. But Mint Mobile is is winning. They are making their own space in the market because of how good their marketing is. So check this out. Relatability, similarity. They use casual vocab and similar words to people in everyday conversation. So customer care that actually cares. super short wait times, easy to speak with an actual human. Look at how they're using this. Like, it's just it's subtle, but it's a huge difference, especially in a market where people feel just betrayed by the big, you know, big players in that space. Um, for those 55 and up, familiarity, consistency, branding is consistent everywhere. So, Mint Mobile, they have this Mint branding all the time. Um, most of their ads are Ryan Reynolds because I think he's the owner of it. So, every ad they're used to seeing Ronald Reynolds face. Pretty simple. Um, look at this. Look at this authenticity, humanity. How in the are prices so low? Imagine that is the is your thing, right? Like this is a a they're trying like a this is a boomer business model. This is not selling info here. This these are selling like freaking sales service and they're saying this. We don't hate you. Transparency, care, nos. See, we're not kidding. It's just cool the language they're using. All their like marketing is super chill. It's like you're you're watching your friends videos. Uh on 420 they put this the only herb we care about today would be mint. It's just it's funny dude. It's just so funny. Uh happiness and warmth. All of their marketing is just very fun and warm and humor and story. I mean look at Ryan Reynolds, right? How can you not buy from him? Um, in his ads, Ryan talks confidently, a lot of conviction, but is still humble. And so, here we have like a little, you know, Mint Mobile versus these people. Yeah, pretty chill. Uh, the humor and storytelling is is everything. Like, humor is how they do their ads. Like, every single thing they do is just so funny. It's hilarious. Like, look at this. to pay another Verizon bill. Look at him. It's just funny, dude. They they they got it going on with the marketing for real. Russy, they give a lot of free stuff. Pretty cool. Attractive and confidence. I mean, look, it's Ryan Reynolds's brand. Of course, he's freaking attractive. Um, but also the brand is too. All the branding is nice. Uh, the fox is just chilling. Skill and social proof. Um, yeah, anti beneficiary bias, non needed. Everything they do is non needed. It's very nice. They just their marketing is on point, guys. Like, this is what a pro marketer looks like in the 21st century. And then, uh, yeah, they throw a lot of like they do a lot of throwing rocks at enemies, which I think is really cool. So, it uses the hashtag Verizon sucks. The letters and codes map onto the keypad as their actual phone hotline number. And this code means Verizon I hate you. So this is their like this is their number and it comes out to Verizon I hate you. It's just so funny. Yeah, that's so funny. So anyways, those are just a few examples of how to use this. I've gone on I've got some more over here. So there's Apple if you want to check that out. Bloom and um Dan Co. There's a lot of this good stuff on Danco. Like Dan Co did this incredibly as well. So you guys can check out how they do this. But I want to say this is just kind of some some nice overviews. It goes so much deeper than this if you see if you notice how people do stuff. You'll see this everywhere. And I don't have time to um um break down every single YouTube video these guys do. But as you're watching the videos, notice how they're using these things because most of this is used at top of funnel because that's when you want people to start liking you and trusting you. So before you can get them on a sales call and sell them, they need to like and trust you to some extent. That's why all this is very very important. Um, yeah. So, that being said, I don't want you to sit here and watch scrolling your phone for a little bit and think, "Oh yeah, I learned a lot today. This is great. Good job, KJ. Appreciate it." And go make no money. I make these videos so you can change your life and make some money. And so, here's what I want you to do by the end of this week. Super simple. I want you to write down three brands that you really like. So, brands or pe brands or people. It could be just a comedian. could be uh I don't know, it could be anybody. Just find three brands or people that you like. Then I want you to use this mural template. So, I'm going give you guys this template. And um I gave you example of of Hamza here. And then we've got I forgot to change that. We've got three places for you to take screenshots and make notes of three examples. I want you to break down those people that you like and um figure out how are they being relatable and similar? How are they being familiar? How are they being authentic happiness? If you want to, you can do this with mine. Um, if you go to my daily channel, like I'm practicing a lot of these, almost every single one of them, I'm practicing and leveling up by doing those daily videos. So, if you want to check that out, you can. And uh, yeah, I want you to write down tactics that you learn that you might be able to use in your own copy and marketing. That will give you a head start on learning these concepts and putting them into a full marketing strategy. Um, well done. Pat yourself on the back when you finish this because you deserve it. 99 99.9% of people are not going to take action. They're not going to do it and they're not going to learn what you're going to learn. So, congrats to you. But anyways, I know this is a long one, but this one is freaking powerful. I mean, I I've had more fun making this module than I think almost any other module. This was dope. Uh, quick reminder, if you want me to crank out more modules like this one and even better, just let me know what you thought. Let me know if you have any wins, any mental breakthroughs, any like realizations you had during this course and put it in the course wins channel in the copy discord because honestly, selfishly guys, it just it picks me up to be honest. Like when I'm having a hard day, I look at those wins and I think this is why I do it. This is why I spend freaking 20 hours on one Google doc is because it helps you guys. And so if it's helping you, let me know. If it's not helping you, then uh leave me some some constructive feedback and I'll try to make it better. But if it's genuinely helping you, please just let me know. And uh we share these in my team Slack. Like we share them every time we see them and everyone just gets so excited. So thank you so much. I love you guys and I'll see you in the next module.
