

6. Urgency-Scarcity

[Music] All right. Welcome to Urgency Scarcity, the sixth module in the copyrighting 101 course. I can't believe we're on module six already. Man, time is flying by, but I'm excited cuz this stuff is powerful. And the sooner I get it to you, the sooner you start using it to make money and change life. So, let's get into it. In this module, we're going to cover the importance of urgency and scarcity to creating action in your audience. Now, I'm hoping this will be a shorter, more straightforward module, but do not think that this is not as important as every single other module in this course. It's extremely important. This is like the cherry on top. This is pulling the trigger. This is taking advantage of everything we've already done leading up to this. So because of that, I highly recommend watching every previous module before watching this module as we'll be building on the concepts that we learned there. So if you don't understand those, it'll be hard to understand urgency scarcity. So without further ado, let us get right into it. Cognitive ease. You see, our brains prefer tasks that feel easy, smooth, familiar, things that are effortless, simple, not complicated. When something feels mentally effortful or complex, your brain subconsciously resists it. We don't like hard stuff. Simple as that. Humans will naturally gravitate towards the path that requires the least cognitive and physical effort, even if it's not the best choice. So if we think something's going to be hard and it's going to take a lot of effort mentally and physically, well, we don't want to do it. Why? Because the brain is a lazy optimizer. It optimizes for laziness. It wants to conserve energy. And that sounds terrible, but it's actually a great thing because it's a biological survival mechanisms, which basically means like if we if everything we did was hard and we didn't seek the easier path out, we wouldn't create technology, we wouldn't solve problems that that make life easier. But we have to take this in mind whenever we're coming to, you know, try to influence or persuade someone. If something feels hard, your brain will do whatever it takes to avoid it. This also applies to making decisions. So an example, making a big decision to invest thousands of dollars into a coaching program where you'll have to do more work if you join. So this is what you guys went through in Copy Elite. You had to make a big decision. Do you invest a lot of your money into a program where you're going to have to do more work for joining? It's a big decision and I can bet most of you procrastinated on it because a lot of people we talked to they're like, "Oh, I need to think about it. I need to take some time." And so for weeks or maybe months, you were like, "Ah, I'm not going to do it." Until the pain of life got so high and the conviction you had in us became so great that you decided to, you know, pull the trigger and to buy the program and to invest. And what's funny is even if there's an action you know will benefit you, if it's hard, your brain will try to avoid it. So a lot of you guys, you knew copy elite was where you wanted to be. You saw all the wins for over a year now, just straight wins. You knew it would help you, but you also knew it wouldn't be easy and so you tried to avoid it. And our brain's favorite tool, its ninja weapon is procrastination. Saying, "I'll do it later." or saying, "I'll

decide later." So whether it's school exams, doing outreach, breaking up with your toxic girlfriend who you know you should break up with, or firing people, letting go of people who clearly aren't a good fit for your business. It's tough. It sucks, man. There's it's it's there's no nothing fun about it. And because of that, our brain likes to use procrastination. And here's why procrastination is such a favor favorable option. It's kind of genius low-key like your brain is very smart at avoiding doing crap. So the first thing is you don't have to suffer the pain of doing now. So by not doing the action, you don't face the pain of taking the action. So think about pain and confidence. Why do we take an action? Well, if the pain of action is low, meaning it's easy, and the pain of not taking the action is high, meaning life's going to suck if you don't do it, you're going to take the action. Procrastinating gives your brain a loophole to not not take the action because you're procrastinating. So, you avoid the pain of doing it, but also you trick yourself into thinking you're going to do the action later. So, you still feel the benefit of of taking the action. So, by doing this, you're avoiding some of the pain of inaction, which is crazy. So, let's imagine you've got a school exam coming up and you know you should study, but it's like two weeks down the line and studying sucks. You don't really do anything else. And so, what do you do? You procrastinate. You tell yourself you'll do it later. So, you're not saying you're not going to do it. So, you don't you don't fight the pain of like failing the class. So you you kind of avoid the pain of inaction, but you also avoid the pain of action because you agree to do it later. Uh it's sneaky, man. It's ninja, but our brains will do this. So you basically trick yourself into thinking you get the benefits of doing the action even though you're you've not done the action. You're like, "Oh, I'm going to do it later." It's kind of the same thing of talking about doing stuff all the time instead of actually doing stuff. So, when I first started entrepreneurship, me and my brother were so we're so bad about this. We'd call each other every day and talk about our plans and how we're going to make this money, how we're going to launch this offer and do this thing. And we got the dopamine of of talking about the reward without actually doing anything. It's dangerous. Be careful. There's people who talk about doing stuff and there's people who do stuff. Be the second one. Be the second one. So, that's why procrastinating is such a favorable option for your brain. And this was the downfall of my college business career. Um, part of it was because I inherently knew that everything I was learning was not valuable to me. So, that was a huge part. Don't get me wrong, that was a big part of it. I knew what I was learning I wouldn't ever use. And so, I didn't want to learn it because my brain optimizes for leverage and I knew how low leverage that was. But, story for another day. I would procrastinate my end of term papers until, I'm not kidding, the very last hour possible. I would be walking to the test studying on Quizlet for the first time. Like it was bad. Sometimes I would even ask for an extension on the deadline because I procrastinated through the actual deadline. And it wasn't until I was faced with a

with a with a a mandatory time that I had to decide until I had no choice but to write the paper now or fail was the only time I took the action I needed to. I'm gonna say that again because it's very important. Until I had no choice, no choice, procrastinating was no longer an option. I either face the pain of action or face the pain of inaction. I had no choice. That's when I took the action I needed to. That's when I made the decision. And the same will happen in your marketing without the power of urgency and scarcity. And so if you never place them in a situation where they have to decide, they won't decide. They'll procrastinate. Now, ultimately, you're going to get some people who buy, but that's because life has put them in a situation where they their urgency and scarcity is already there. There has to be some sort of urgency and scarcity for someone to take action. There has to be. And so some people will buy because they've already put placed that on themselves. But you should do the ethical job of of giving them good urgency and scarcity to help them take the actions that will benefit their life. So you must present them with a situation where they have to decide now. You must help them face the awareness of their pain. No longer avoiding it. Simple example of this is like a 15% off popup for first-time visitors to give you their email. I messed that up right there. Oops. Give you if you give them their email. Hold on. 15% off popup for first- time visitors if they give they give you their email. There we go. Sorry about that. So, what does this do? you want their email, they want a discount. By forcing them to to literally choose right now, like they don't get another option, it's only for first-time visitors, they're now forced with with a decision. Either they let go of the 15% by holding on to their email or they give you their email and get 15%. There's no other option. They have to do those those one of those two options. You're forcing them to make a decision. Now, I want you guys to to just if you're being distracted, please listen to me. Please listen to me. This is like the most important section of this whole module. You're not forcing someone to buy. You're forcing them to decide. You're helping them make a decision. There's a very big difference. We're okay with yes or no. We're just never okay with maybe. That's what you want because maybe doesn't help anyone. maybe keeps them stuck where they are in life instead of progressing down a path. There's so many ways you can succeed, but the only way that you'll never succeed is if you never do anything. And that's what we don't want. We want a yes or a no, but never a maybe. And that's exactly what we'll cover in this module. How to help people make the tough decisions and take the hard actions that will benefit their life. not take their money, not leave them feeling like they got scammed, but to benefit them. So, psychology of urgency and scarcity at their core, urgency and scarcity both stem from loss aversion, which basically is like a principle saying that humans fear losing something more than they desire gaining it. So, we talked about this before in this course, but um most humans will like walk or if if you tell someone that they they drop $20 two miles back, they'll walk to get it. If you if you ask them if they'll walk two miles to get 20 bucks, they won't do it because humans fear losing more than they desire gaining. So when time is running out or availability is disappearing, our brains throw a mini panic party. Rational thinking, logic steps aside, and decisions get made faster, usually emotionally. Urgency is about limited time. So time is running out. The clock is ticking. If I don't do this now, I'll miss out. Scarcity is about a limited availability. So urgency is limited amount of time. Scarcity is limited amount of stuff. So people feel pressured to act because there's not enough to go around. It's a classic example of, you know, imagine there's not enough food to go around. Like someone's going to starve. Well, you're acting pretty emotionally like you want you want some of that food. It's scarce. You need to get it. And so the emotion here is if I don't act fast, it'll be gone. So what what I want to do is this is honestly the first principle. Like that's it. If you use this and think creatively, you'll be good. But it's hard to know like how do you use this ethically? So I want to go over go over the typical forms of urgency and scarcity. Reminder, always keep first principles in mind. Make sure you're using the best form for your situation. Or even better, get creative and create your own form for your situation. Don't just copy these blindly. Think about what is going to work best in your scenario for your people and your offer and get creative. All right. Forms of urgency. This is limited time left to decide. So time. Starting with number one, rolling cohorts. This is when a new group starts regularly, but if you miss this round, you have to wait. So you have to decide or face the pain of waiting till the next time. So example would be next cohort starts June 15th, doors close this Friday at midnight. So it forces you to decide or else you're going to miss out on this thing that's leaving. Or kind of like a train like a train's coming into the station and if you don't hop on in that 30 seconds, it's going to leave without you and you've got to wait till the next train. It's the same thing. Next, seasonal urgency. So, very similar, but it's only available during a specific time of the year or tied to a seasonal event. So, our summer launch boot camp only runs once a year. Enroll by July 1st or wait until 2026. So, face the pain of action now or the pain of inaction, meaning waiting for an entire year. Next is pricing urgency. So this one's very very typical in the space, but the price increases after a specific deadline. So join now for 997 price increases to 1500 in the next 48 hours. So forced with a decision to decide now, pain of action or pain of inaction meaning paying more at a later date. Next is exploding opportunity. So a rare time-sensitive external advantage act now or miss out forever. think gold rush. So like something's happening that's external of everyone, but it's an it's an opportunity that if you don't get on now, you could miss out big time. FOMO. So Instagram's algorithm is favoring reels in 2025. Learn how to dominate before the next update rolls out and they become obsolete. So once again, gold rush opportunity. Next bonus urgency. So, enroll before Sunday to get a free one-on-one coaching session, $500 value. So, basically saying like you've got limited time to enroll in order to apply for this bonus. Next, event based urgency. So, tied to a live event, a launch, or webinar. Registration closes when we go live on June 10th, 700 p.m. EST. This is another reason why webinars are so compelling just naturally because it's a live thing and there's urgency baked in. So if you miss it, you miss it. It's over. So event-based urgency is big. Same thing with concerts. Um, you know, it's only happening once. You got to make it there. Next, countdown timers. This is just visual urgency. So have like an actual clock on your page saying this is how much time is left. And every second that ticks down, it's like another pinch on the urgency vein. It's just like every every second that ticks by, you feel this urgency and you start thinking emotionally. You start panicking. Fast action urgency. So bonus or offer only for people who act within the first whatever of seeing the offer. So like if you enroll in the next 15 minutes, you get an exclusive bonus vault. So basically the urgency is now fast action instead of like waiting for the time to run out. Um external deadline urgency. So basically something is happening outside of you and your clients that's like someone else has a deadline. It's external deadline. So Kajjabi trial ends June 1st. We're shutting everything down after that. Um that one's kind of niche. She probably won't use that a lot but good to know. Personal deadline urgency. This is good for use in one-on-one calls or email follow-ups. You can basically tell them on a sales call, um, I can reserve your spot until tomorrow, but after that, I'm going to have to open it back up. It's only fair. So, that's personalized urgency just for that one person you're talking to. U, I've used this a lot in Copy Elite. Back when we had a wait list, I would tell people, "Hey man, like I I'm going to reserve your spot for the next week, but after that, like I'm going to let other people in because we just I can't save it forever." Very, very powerful. Here we have urgency plus emotional leverage and pain. Shout out to Big Verge for this one. This is a great one. Urgency can hit harder when it's paired with an emotional pain or dream outcome. So one way to do this is by using like the top of mountain versus rock bottom duality. So what you're doing is you're basically tying urgency to the pain that life is already forcing them to feel. So a good example was in Iman's remote revolution 2.0. Top of the mountain was owning your own future, being your own captain. Rock bottom was being owned by others, being enslaved. Urgency with no emotion would just be, hey, enroll before Friday to get $100 off. But urgency using emotion would be if you're serious about not being told when to wake up, where to be, or how much you're worth, this is your chance. Enrollment closes Friday. After that, it's back to being owned by someone else's schedule. So, notice how we're not actually offering anything. It's just some urgency with a serious amount of emotion tied to it, which is very, very powerful, especially in like B to C. Cool. That is urgency. Moving on to forms of scarcity, meaning limited amount of stuff. So the first very basic is limited amount of supply. So there's only so many available. Once they're gone, they're gone. This is very, very popular in clothing brands. They do this a lot. So there's only so many available in this drop. And after that drop is gone, they're never being made again. So extreme scarcity. Only 30 hoodies left. Once they're gone, they're gone. Next, limited supply of bonuses. So, everyone's everyone can still get the main thing, but the bonuses only apply for the fastest movers. So, first 10 buyers get access to the VIP mastermind. Three spots left. Next is never available again. So, this version of this offer won't ever return, not even on Black Friday. So, nothing is coming back for this offer. This is the last time we're ever going to do this. After this, it's going to be gone forever. Um, that's kind of like a limited supply would mean like you're going to resupply it later. Never available again, meaning like after the supply is gone, it's never coming back. So, think like high-end designer clothes. They'll do like a drop and once they do that drop, you're never going to see anything like that again. Next is dripped availability scarcity. So, you release only a few seats and products each round. So, it's kind of like just drip feeding stuff. So, only five new slots are open each month. This is what I did in the early days of Copy Lead where I had to one-on-one coach everyone because there was no program like the this course didn't exist yet. I had to basically teach this course one-on-one to everyone, which is very low leverage, but that's the best way to start a coaching program is just getting hands-on and helping people live. I had to have dripped availability scarcity because I simply could not under good faith sell 30 people into this program every month because I couldn't get them result because it was just me. There was no program. Um so I did this you know only certain amount of people were open only a certain amount of slots were open each month. Next is tiered scarcity. So different bonuses for the first amount of buyers the next amount of buyers etc. So first 10 get this, next 20 get this and then it's just the base course. Pretty simple, just a little bit fancier way to do tier or scarcity. Next is scarcity by qualification. So not everyone gets access. You must apply or be approved. So we only accept students who pass our onboarding form and match our community standards. This was not not extremely powerful when it comes to like actual scarcity sake. It's more of a play on status. So, we want things that we can't have. And so, by somebody positioning this as something that is kind of scarce and only the smartest people or only the best people get in, you want in. So, pretty different angle of scarcity, but I like it. Next is time plus quantity scarcity. So, both a deadline and limited spots. So, doors close in 48 hours or when we hit 100 members, whichever comes first. So, a little bit of double action going on. Scarcity of access or support. So, you can buy anytime, but personalized access is limited. So, this is the only time I'll be coaching live. Future rounds will be self-paced only. So, like I said, pretty simple, but make sure you're using first principles and not just copying these, but use the best ones for your offer. Now, let's go over keys. So, anybody can just copy and paste one of these forms, but what makes effective urgency? Urgency that that really drives action. The first thing is it must be real. People can smell fake deadlines. I see this all the time in the info space and it it cringes me the heck out. I mean, if you have stupid marketing, you're going to attract

stupid people, and you don't want that ideally. You must be real. Don't say doors close at midnight if they reopen every single week. People are not stupid. You're going to lose trust. And honestly, you're just being slimy. So, make sure it's real urgency. Use deadlines that actually matter. So, real events like launches, seasons, price changes. Um, show a countdown timer. Like, make it visual. Remind them frequently. Like, people need to get in this frame of like, I need to make a decision. And if if you lose them, just remind them so they come back to this frame. Most people will delay until the last second. Procrastination. So, use multiple touch points, email, SMS, ads. The closer the deadline gets, the more you should be reminding them. Fourth, very, very important, combine with a reason why. Give a logical reason behind the deadline. So, we start group calls on Monday and I don't want to let people in late. It's like if you want in, now is your chance. 48 hours left. So, give people a reason. Pretty simple, but like if you if you don't do these right guys, it it leads to just you're going to leave so much on the table versus when you nail this and you really you really clock it in, it's uh it's so powerful. Next, keys to effective scarcity. Number one, obviously like be real again. I'm just like be legit. Don't say you've got 10 left if you've got 100,000 left. Don't say never never selling again if you're going to sell it again. Be honest. Be truthful. But number one, be specific with numbers. So limited spots is kind of eh. Only three VIP spots left is juicy. It's specific. It's tangible. It makes people want to to get after it. Number two, make it visible. So, show a live counter, a struck through bonus, or say like 10 claimed out of 12 total almost gone. Three, follow through. If you say you're capping access, freaking cap, you goobers, don't do fake scarcity. Scarcity only works if people believe it. Number four, explain why it's limited. Not just to make you buy, but give legit reasons. So, I can only coach 20 students at a time to give proper support. That was my legit reason for why I had scarcities because I literally as being one human, I'm scarce. I'm scarcity. So, I had to limit the coaching. Um, all right. So, let's go over a quick little urgency and scarcity checklist. So, when you're going over your urgency and scarcity, um, consider running it through this checklist. Number one, is the urgency of scarcity real and specific? Does it sound real? Is it believable? Is it specific? Number two, is there a clear reason why for the limitation? So, have you explained the urgency of scarcity? Does it seem legit? Number three, have you tied the urgency to a real world consequence? So, that emotional part we talked about, what happens if they don't take action? How are they going to feel? Have you made it visible? Visual visible, sorry. Timer, counter, explicit numbers. Have you reinforced it across multiple touch points? Have you reminded them? Just keep these in mind and you'll be on the right track. So, let's grab some water and let's go over my example. So, this is a real example of me using urgency and scarcity to sell my low ticket product, Digital Persuasion School. And what's crazy is I did over $90,000 in sales with a very small audience with just a sales page. That's it. Like small YouTube videos to a sales page and did

almost 100K in the span of like six months. But honestly, most of that was in the first three to four. Like I was doing 20 30k months or really I think it was like 20k months for months on end. It was crazy. And I attribute a lot of that to how perfect I nailed the urgency of scarcity on this offer. So let's look at it. You're still early. Lock in your spot now before it's too late. So FOMO. This is the opportunity you've been waiting for. What is this one we're talking about? Um, where is it? Exploding opportunity. While this is the opportunity of a lifetime, there's one small problem. So, here I'm explaining why I'm going to drop the urgency and scarcity. The more people who have access to the information, the less valuable it becomes. So, to keep DPS as valuable as possible for each member, I'm going to raise the price of DPS for every hundred people that join. This is crazy. So, basically, I'm like, I now have you thanking me for raising the price, which is insane. And it's it's a real like it's a real justification because I had outreach systems in here. The more people who knew those the information, the less valuable it become for everyone else. This is crazy. This is some ninja stuff. So, and what I did was I then I then gave it even some more copy. So, this will ensure three things. DPS remains valuable for each member. The community is full of only the most high quality entrepreneurs who are serious and you are rewarded for taking action now by locking your access before you have to pay double. So really, really powerful point. That being said, now is your chance to lock in your spot for the insanely low price of $97 a month. After the first 100 people join, it'll never be this price again. So click the button below to save your spot for $97. And what I did was to show how real this was, I when I wrote when I raised the price, I crossed out the price and I put the date of when I raised it. So I documented like, hey, I'm not joking. I am raising the price. Here's what happened last time. Here's where it's at now. Here's what it'll be next time. Extremely extremely powerful. I can't like state this enough. You have to help them decide. So, there's a lot of people who didn't buy this and they never bought it, but at least I helped them decide. They didn't they didn't have to wonder, "Am I going to buy it later? Oh, um I'm going to decide next week." No, they decided now. They made the decision. They moved on. Very powerful. Now, very important reminders. Very, very important. your marketing message as a whole, meaning the copy you've written, the state of mind your audience is in and the emotions you've you've brought up, affect the urgency of scarcity they feel. It affects the frame they're in. And what I mean by this is you can't just slap limited time left on a page and make a million dollars. The tactics should be the cherry on top of a perfectly executed sales message. And with great power comes great responsibility. Please, please, please do not start lying and bending the truth in everything you write to create urgency and scarcity. Please do not do this. You're only going to create misery for your your leads and yourself down the line. Don't do this. And some verses to back this up because I base all reality on the Bible is so that we may no longer be children tossed to and fro by the the waves and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by human cunning and by craftiness in deceitful schemes. So Paul is warning believers about people who misuse persuasion. He's saying there's human cunningness by craftiness and deceit, deceitful schemes. I don't want you guys to be the people doing this by setting traps and by lying and by using urgency and scarcity in an unethical way. Please don't do this. Next, but we have renounced disgraceful underhanded ways. We refuse to practice cunning or to tamper with God's word. So do not play with the truth. Don't lie. Refuse to practice cunning. Do this out of a heart to help people. Uh Genesis 3 says the serpent was more crafty than any other beast that God had made. Don't be crafty. Don't be cunning. Don't lie. For such persons do not serve our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own appetites. And by smooth talk and flattery, they deceive the hearts of the naive. Your customers are probably going to be less aware than you. Do not lead them astray with smooth talk, with cunningness, by lies, by bending the truth or not telling the whole truth. Instead, use truth to help people take action to change their lives for the better. So, some positive verses rather speaking the truth in love. We are to grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ. So speak truth in love and look more like Jesus. So yeah, there's really no better way to recap this section. Um I just want to warn you guys, like I said earlier, by knowing this, you now have a great responsibility. Don't fall for other people's false urgency and scarcity. But and more importantly, don't use this to to deceive others, to lead them astray. Don't do it. Even even if your product is great and it's quote unquote going to help them if they get in, do not lie. Do not bend the truth. Because I can tell you from experience, guys, I'm not perfect. And I've done this many times in the past on this offer and it always brings misery down the line. I'd rather speak the truth in love and to share the honest goodness truth and to use urgency and scarcity ethically to help them decide and to change their life for the better than to just deceive them, take someone's money and leave them out to dry. So, please don't do that. Use truth to help people t take action to change their lives for the better. So, quick reminder. Um, thank you guys. Thanks for watching these modules. I hope it's changing your life as much as making them changes mine and this information has changed my life for the better and it's helped me understand how to help the people I love. So, please use this to help people and um let me know any wins, any breakthroughs, any thoughts you have on this module of course. Like I said, be honest. If you didn't like it, then don't tell me you liked it. But if you did like it and want to encourage me to make more of these, just let me know in the course wins channel or on a coaching call. Um, it gives me a lot of energy to know that the pain of losing my voice every every week is worth it just to see you guys succeed more and to uh achieve your dreams. So, I love you guys and I'll see you all in the next module.
