

Specific Conditions

Click here for Google Doc \(Click File > Make a Copy\)

Introduction

Welcome to the first module in the 'First Principles' section of the 'Copywriting 101' course. In this section, you'll learn the fundamentals of selling through the written word.

It's highly recommended to watch the 'Foundations' course in its entirety before watching this course. We'll be building on and going into more depth on the concepts we've covered there.

Before we begin, please note that these concepts can only be fully learned by 'Web-Learning'. For best results, watch through every module in this section twice. The first time, pay full attention to the videos, and on the second run through, take notes.

Get excited. This information is everything I used to generate $500k+ in revenue with my copy within my first year of fully learning this skill. Let's dive in.

Link to the FULL video version: Specific Conditions Video

Link to the mastersheet: Copywriting Mastersheet

join copy skool: <https://www.skool.com/copyskool>

First Principles

As we've discussed in previous courses, to develop a full understanding of a concept, we must start from first principles and work our way up to the more tactical information.

Learning the skill of copywriting is no exception. Let's break it down.

Copywriting: Words written to persuade.

We can break this simple definition down into three core components:

Human + Stimulus = Response (Or lack thereof)

Reader + Words = Action (Or lack thereof)

Your main purpose as a copywriter:

> Write words that change readers' beliefs, causing them to take action.

If your words fail in changing beliefs and/or creating action, your stimulus is ineffective.

If your words succeed in changing beliefs and/or creating action, your stimulus is effective.

Big-Picture Tie-in: This is why copywriting is one of the most valuable skills a person can learn. If you learn how to craft 'effective' stimuli, you can create systems that are 'effective', meaning you get outputs you want in life.

Effective Stimuli Examples:

- > Your YouTube video title causes target viewers to click.
- > Your email subject line causes recipients to open the email.
- > Your email body copy causes readers to click the CTA link.
- > Your headline causes readers to feel intrigued and continue reading.
- > Your pain bullet causes readers to feel pain.
- > Your short-form hook causes viewers to stop scrolling and watch the reel.

The Lock & Key Visual

(I modified this explanation from Charlie Morgan, huge shoutout to him.)

This visual helps can us gain a clearer understanding of our role as a copywriter:

You can view your reader's mind as the lock.

If you can unlock the lock (write 'good' copy/craft effective stimuli), you'll cause the action (belief change/sale) you want.

We can draw some important truths about copywriting from this visual.

Truth #1:

- It's impossible to craft the 'perfect key' without first understanding the lock you're crafting it for.
- It's impossible to write 'great copy' without first understanding who you're writing to.

Truth #2:

- The better you understand the lock, the easier/faster you can craft the right key.
- The better you understand who you're writing to, the easier/faster you can write great copy.

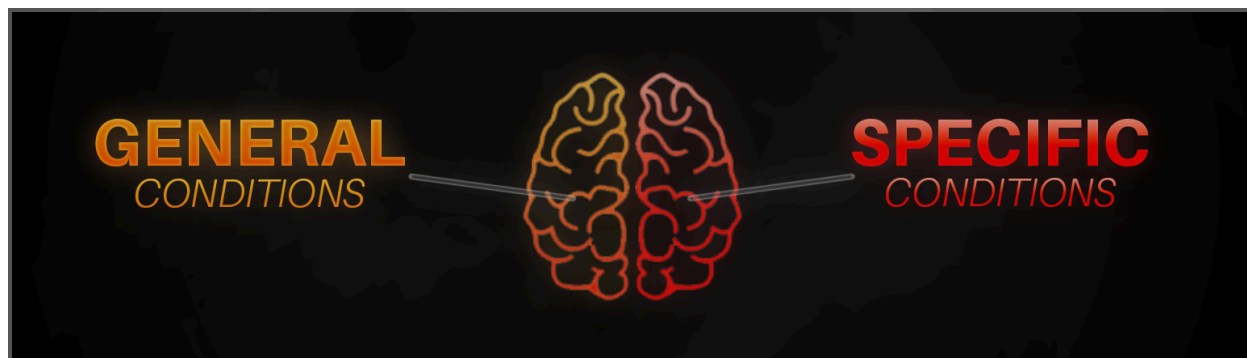

Truth #3:

- The 'perfect' key for one lock might not work for another lock.
- The 'perfect' copy for one customer profile/niche might be completely ineffective for another customer profile/niche.

Understanding The Lock

The first step to writing effective copy is gaining a deep understanding of the person you're writing to — understanding the 'lock'.

To better understand our readers' minds, we can segment their minds into two parts:

1. General Conditions (All Humans):

- How our brains are 'pre-programmed' to think.
- Most of these thinking patterns weren't taught; they came pre-installed.
- Most of these thinking patterns come from what some people call the 'monkey-brain'.
- When using our subconscious brain, it usually thinks along these lines.
- The practical application of 'General Conditions' will be covered much more in-depth in the 'Text-Subtext' module.

This part of the brain can be very emotion-based, which is why most copy is written to target this emotional, often irrational, part of the brain! (We'll cover how to do this in the Text-Subtext module.)

Thankfully, God has given our conscious brain the ability to 'override' these subconscious patterns, which is why not everyone becomes the same eternal IG Reel monkeys.

Example:

> Our brains want to conserve energy, therefore, our subconscious brain prefers to take 'the easier path'. (Our subconscious would rather scroll IG reels than do deep work.)

> Practical application: You make the opportunity you're selling sound EASY! You make your copy EASY to read.

(No matter how 'smart' someone is, when it comes to reading copy/being sold, they prefer it to be as simple and easy-to-read/understand as possible.)

2. Specific Conditions (Niche-Specific):

- The psychological, physical, & situational conditions shared by the people you're targeting with your marketing.
- These are the conditions specific to your niche/audience and the experiences that created these conditions.
- Their past experiences, their current situation, their desired future, their pain points, the language they use, their perceived problems, etc.

Let's look at some specific conditions/experiences that created specific conditions of early-stage copywriters: (possibly you before this program)

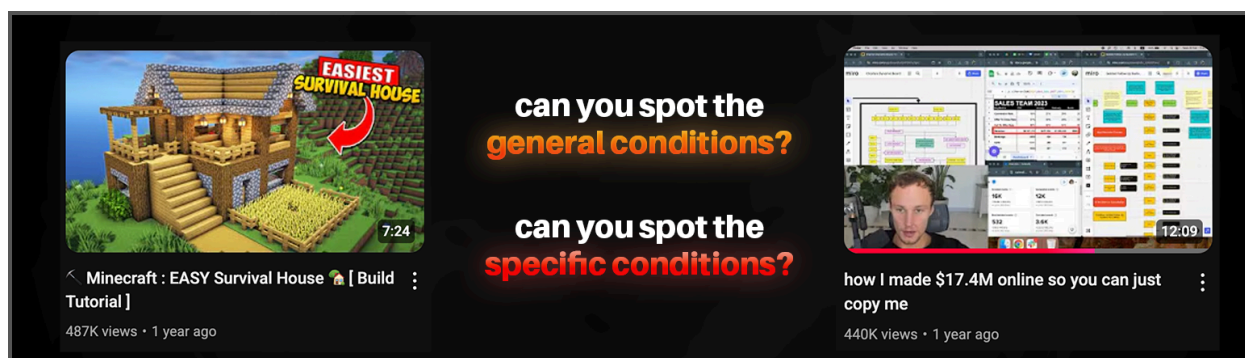

- Watched multiple "free copywriting courses" on YouTube, but haven't written much copy.
- Memorized frameworks like AIDA, PAS, etc but when they go to write, they don't know where to start.
- They feel like their copy is decent, but they don't have an expert who can give them an honest review.
- They've joined multiple free copywriting communities, but soon realized it was just the blind leading the blind.
- They struggle with imposter syndrome. Some days they feel like their copy is solid and they can really help people with their skill... Other days they feel like this is all a big scam and no one really makes money like this.
- They think if they could just get ONE client they could prove to themselves and their family that this stuff is legit.
- They've bought courses and coaching in the past which never lived up to their expectations.
- They're eager to invest in themselves and this skill but they're scared of being burned by another "guru" over-promising and under-delivering.
- They want the magical goal of "$10k/m". They think all of their pains would disappear if they could just hit that number. (they won't lol)
- They're not normal/average. They play video games and party with their friends but they always feel like a failure during and afterwards. They KNOW they have the potential to do so much more.
- They spend as little time on writing & outreach as possible, and find worthless distractions (like making a new profile picture or posting on social media), while knowing they are deluding themselves and wasting their time.
- They are primarily driven by one word: freedom (in financial, location & time terms).
- They blame all of their copywriting problems & lack of success on "saturation" or "bad niche."
- They like the idea of being a copywriter but ultimately see it as just a stepping stone to creating their own business/manifesting the future they desire.

Finding, collecting, and understanding the specific conditions of your target audience is the key to writing effective copy/creating effective stimuli that lead to actions/responses.

The better you understand what's going on inside their mind, the easier it will be to grab their attention, generate interest and trust, and change their beliefs/inspire action.

Once you've mastered writing copy that appeals to the human brain's general conditions, your audience's specific conditions, and your depth of understanding of them, DIRECTLY dictate your copy/stimuli's effectiveness.

Example:

Notice the general conditions and specific conditions used in both thumbnails.

Like I mentioned earlier, we'll dive deeper into general conditions and how to leverage them in our copy in the following modules — but for now, let's focus on the all-important specific conditions.

Leveraging Specific Conditions

There are two keys to leveraging specific conditions effectively:

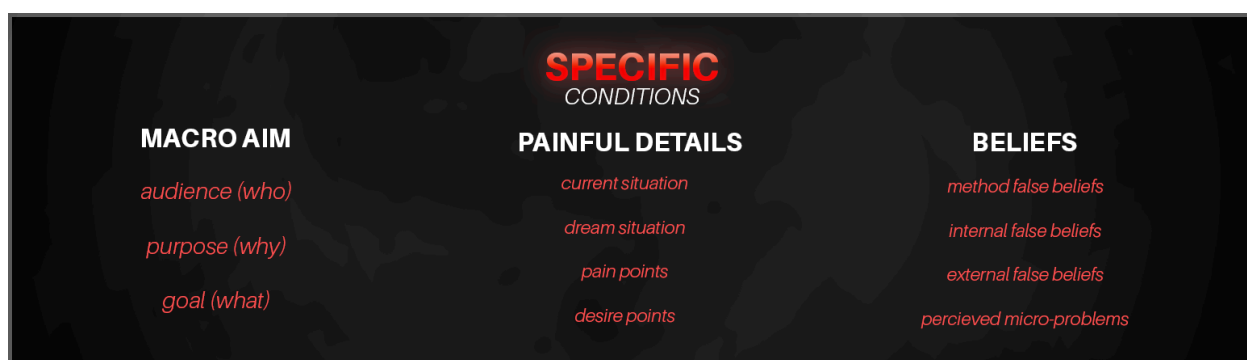

1. Condition Scalability:
 - a. No matter how similar people are in a niche, there are always differences from person to person. Your audience won't be 10,000 carbon copies of the same person. Your job is to find which specific conditions are shared by the largest portion of your audience.

EX: You might find that some people in your audience's drive to make money comes from their desire for freedom, which they verbalize as 'wanting to travel the world.' However, the majority of your audience wants to make money so they can get their family out of a bad situation. You'd write copy appealing to the second desire since it 'scales' more in your audience.
2. Condition Potency:
 - a. The secret to writing compelling copy isn't by finding and targeting a million specific conditions. The power comes from finding and targeting the few specific conditions that matter the MOST to your audience.

EX: You might find that your audience wants to lose weight so they can feel healthier, be better at sports, have more confidence, and attract a hot partner. While these are all good reasons, the power comes from focusing most of your messaging on the one desire they want the MOST. After research and reflection, you find out that the main desire they want more than anything is to look attractive to attract a partner. So that's what you target in your copy.

We can group our audiences' specific conditions into a few categories to make them easier to spot and leverage.

Here's how I group them:

I've created a Conditions Deck Template based on what I've found to work best for quickly writing effective copy. You can access it below or in this module's resources on Skool.

▶ [Conditions Deck \[TEMPLATE\]](#) ◀

Let's cover each category and how to fill it out.

If you feel a bit overwhelmed looking at this deck for the first time, don't worry!

You don't have to be perfect. You don't have to have every single category filled out immediately.

Filling this out for each audience you write to is an iterative process.

Start simple. Fill out what you can. Add/rearrange as you spend more time studying/writing for that audience.

Finding Specific Conditions

You should view finding specific conditions like hunting for buried treasure.
(They're worth just as much if not more lol.)

- > Bad copywriters hunt for tactics and frameworks.
- > Great copywriters hunt for specific conditions of their audience.

Finding ONE extremely potent specific condition could lead to millions in sales from the emotion you generate from that condition over time.

Your job is to dig up as many specific conditions as possible and sift them into the MOST valuable/useful conditions.

There are 3 main ways we can search for specific conditions of our audience:

1. Sales/Discovery Calls ★
2. Personal Experience
3. Search-Based Market Research

Method 1 - Sales/Discovery Calls:

By far the most effective way to find potent specific conditions is to conduct sales calls in that audience, OR ask your client for any sales calls recordings they have from the audience you're trying to target.

If you don't have a client, use method 2 or 3 to gain a good enough understanding to land your first client. (You don't have to understand a niche perfectly to get a client; general conditions alone will be enough in most cases.)

If you have a client or you're writing for your offer, this should be simple:

1. Conduct sales calls or have your client/sales team take sales calls.
2. Use Fathom (or a similar software) to record the calls and transcribe them automatically.

3. Make sure to 'dig deep' in the discovery question of the call. Dig until you hit some real emotion.
4. Grab the transcriptions of as many calls as you can and read over them, looking for the answers to the question on your Conditions Deck.

As with everything we do, iteration is key. The more calls you take, the more you review/search, the better understanding you'll gain of that audience. The better understanding of your audience, the more calls you'll book, giving you even more understanding.

Method 2 - Personal Experience:

A great practice for those of you just starting, OR those of you looking for your long-term niche, is to work with an audience that you are/used to be a part of.

Even a small amount of previous experience can go a long way. You probably know more than you think about a lot of things.

1. Send outreach to clients who have an audience you have experience with.
 - > If you like to work out, target fitness influencers/offers.
 - > If you tried dropshipping for a few weeks, target dropshipping coaches' offers.
2. Think back to how you feel/felt as someone in that audience. Practice visualizing the situations you are/were in, the emotions you felt, and the problems you had.
3. Use this experience to fill out your conditions deck as best as you can to start outreaching and get a client.

If you're still struggling to find a niche you used to have experience in, then just pick something you want to have experience in and start learning. Don't overthink. Go take action, you don't have to have everything perfect.

Method 3 - Search-Based Market Research: using search tools for information/data from your niche.

We can also search for specific conditions by conducting basic search-based market research.

Here are 3 simple methods of market research you can use to collect data/specific conditions from your niche: (There are a million ways to do this, and it is pretty niche-dependent. You NEED to get creative and put in the work. This is some of the highest-leverage work you will do. It's not easy or sexy.)

1. ChatGPT:
 - a. Tell ChatGPT everything you currently know about your niche:
 - i. You are a _____ who does _____ and is looking to _____.
 - b. Ask ChatGPT what answers it would give for the different specific condition types:

- i. What are X big problems you might face as a ____ trying to ____.
- ii. What are some positive beliefs you might have around that goal/domain?
- iii. What are some negative beliefs...? Actions? Emotions? Etc...

2. YouTube videos:

- a. Search for popular YouTube channels that your niche watches.
- b. What are the most popular videos/topics on those channels?
- c. What are the comments saying?
 - i. What questions are they asking?
 - ii. What are they reacting positively to? Negative?

3. Reddit forms: (Not applicable to all niches)

- a. What Reddit forms is your niche in?
- b. What are the most popular posts/topics in that subreddit?
- c. What are the comments saying?
 - i. What questions are they asking?
 - ii. What are they reacting positively to? Negative?

REMEMBER! The goal is NOT to find a million conditions for the heck of it, your goal is to find the conditions that are the MOST powerful/emotionally-charged and are shared by the LARGEST part of your audience. Quality > Quantity. Sniper > Shotgun.

Iteration

The secret ingredient to finding and leveraging specific conditions is small improvements over time.

No matter how 'good' you are, it takes time to gain a deep understanding of an audience.

It takes time to find specific conditions.

It takes time to figure out which ones are the most potent.

It takes time to determine which potent conditions are the most scalable across the niche.

Your conditions deck should be a 'living' document. It should never be 'finished.'

The good news: this game is exponential.

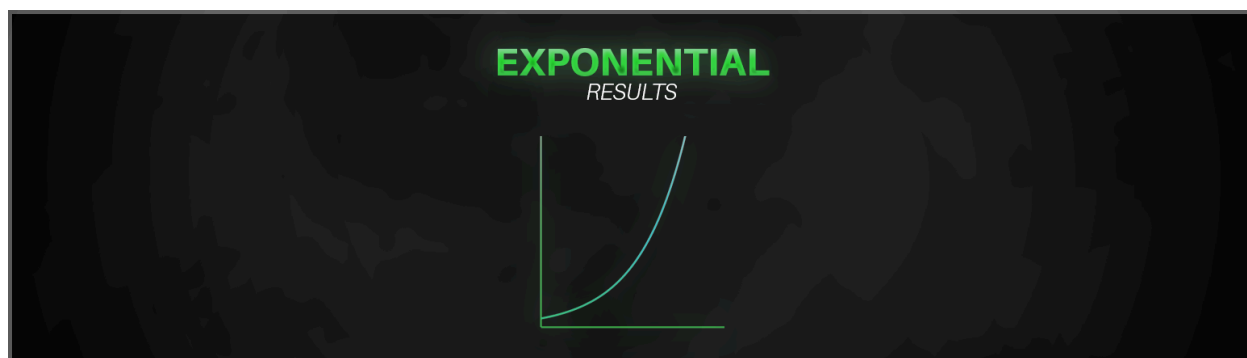

If you understand your audience 5x better than your competition, you won't just get 5x the results — you'll likely get 50x-100x the results.

The better you understand the general conditions of the human mind...

The better you understand the specific conditions of your audience's mind...

The better you can write copy leveraging these conditions...

The crazier your results will be. Obsessive learning leads to obsessive earning.

Iteration Roadmap

To give you as much clarity as possible, I wanna show you a simple roadmap you can follow to ensure you're leveraging specific conditions effectively throughout your journey.

Phase 1 (Getting Your First Client)

(Personal Experience/Search-Based)

1. Choose a niche that you are interested in/have previous experience in.
2. Create a Conditions Deck for that audience, and use critical thinking based on your experience in that audience to fill out your deck as well as possible. (Don't overthink. Don't overthink.)
3. Start outreaching using DM Lightning or a similar free-value-based system.
4. As you're sending outreach and writing free copy, use your Conditions Deck to write your copy and improve your outreach.
5. As you find new specific conditions OR learn which ones are more potent/scalable than others, update your Conditions Deck to reflect your findings.

6. Schedule a recurring time each week to do search-based market research and update your Conditions Deck.
7. Repeat until you land a client.

Phase 2 (Iterating W/ Client)

(Client Experience/Sales Calls)

8. Once you get a client, schedule a time for you both to review your Conditions Deck together and re-rank conditions/add new ones. (They will probably know their audience better than anyone.)
9. Take sales calls or ask for recordings of previous sales calls with the people your client considers to be 'qualified leads'.
10. If you're client doesn't do sales calls, schedule calls with their previous customers to ask them discovery questions to find specific conditions.
11. As you do business/write for this audience, continually update your Conditions Deck to reflect your understanding of the audience.

Take action, don't overthink, enjoy the process, and keep moving forward.

Quick Reminder:

If you want me to crank more modules like this one, and even better, let me know any wins/breakthroughs/thoughts you have on this module/course in the #★course-wins channel in the Discord. It gives me so much energy to know all the pain I go through making these is worth it haha. Love y'all and see you in the next module. ❤️ -KJ

Link to the FULL video version: Specific Conditions Video

join copy skool: <https://www.skool.com/copyskool>

:)